PREFACE

TWENTY years ago I hoped to edit five books of Thucydides. I am glad that I have been able to do so; and now that I have finished, I wish to acknowledge the unfailing courtesy and patience of the publishers.

My chief purpose in this volume has been to enable readers to follow the narrative of the four great episodes contained in Book III. without difficulty. To read the account of them with the aid of a good map and the necessary explanations is an interesting and even exciting experience.

My obligations to the following books are very great:—Busolt's History, and for Lesbos, R. Koldewey's Die antiken Bauwerke der Insel L. and W. Herbst's Der Abfall Mytilenes; for Coreyra, B. Schmidt's Korkyraeische Studien; for Plataea, H. Wagner's Die Belagerung von Plataeae and G. B. Grundy's The Topography of the Battle of Plataea: for Acarnania and Aetolia, Oberhummer's Akarnanien and Woodhouse's Aetolia.

The list of readings at the end of the Introduction will show the small extent to which I have felt it necessary to differ from Mr. Stuart Jones in textual matters. A few conjectures are appended to the list.

II. THE FOUR GREAT EPISODES

1. THE REVOLT OF LESBOS

AT the time of the outbreak of war between Athens and Sparta, only two among the islands of the Aegean retained the status that had originally belonged to all the states which formed the Delian confederacy in 476 B.C. Only Chios and Lesbos were free and independent allies of Athens.

The chief city of Lesbos was Mytilene, on the east coast. It was governed by an oligarchy, which, until a few years before the war, had remained outwardly loyal to the alliance with Athens. The city was powerful and prosperous: it possessed at least fifty ships of war: it had gained a commanding position in the island, so much so that the towns Antissa, Eresus, and Pyrrha were its dependencies: only Methymna, which also possessed a fleet, remained outside its influence. The oligarchs who controlled its policy viewed with apprehension the advance of Athenian power in the Aegean; and they were on the look-out for a favourable moment to break with Athens and join Sparta. An attempt to carry out this design had been made already some two years before the war broke out, but the appeal to Sparta had met with an unfavourable response. The outbreak of the Peloponnesian war must have been a powerful incentive to the oligarchs to renew their efforts. They strengthened their walls, built ships, closed their harbours, sent to Pontus to buy corn and hire archers. They even tried to absorb the governments of the other Lesbian cities, and to establish their supremacy over the whole island.

These measures were encouraged not only by Sparta, but by the Boeotians, who probably wanted to prevent Athens from sending relief to Plataea.

The narrative of the siege of Mytilene is easy to follow, once the leading features of the topography of the city are understood.

1. ΛΙΜΕΝΕΣ (cc. 2, 2 : 3, 6 ; 6, 1). The Acropolis and a small part of the city lay on a little island or rather peninsula on the east coast ; this peninsula was divided from the mainland by a channel or Euripus—which is now silted up, and apparently was not navigable in 428 B.C.¹ The larger and newer part of the city lay on the mainland. The channel formed a connecting link between the two harbours. The northern harbour was the principal one (cf. c. 4, 2) and was included in the city by prolonging the ends of the city walls where they ran down to the coast, both on the acropolis and on the mainland side, far out to sea (cf. c. 2, 2). The works were incomplete when the siege began : and the southern harbour, which is the one now in use, does not seem to have been enclosed at all at that date. This southern harbour, then, was outside the city.

2. τείχη (c. 3, 6). The acropolis was fortified, but at the time of the siege the city-walls were incomplete. They were to run right round the city, both on the land and on the sea side, and to terminate in the harbours, so as to enable them to be closed at need.

3. Μαλόεις Ἀπόλλων (c. 3, 3, 6), ἡ Μαλέα (c. 4, 5). Maloeis appears to have been the name of the low coast-line after you leave the city, at the north-west of the northern harbour. The temple seems to have lain at the northern extremity of this strip of coast, in a little valley. The position is so low that city and harbour cannot be overlooked from it (cf. c. 3, 3). Malea has been identified as a low promontory on this strip of coast, a suitable position from which to keep a watch towards the city and the northern harbour.

4. χαράδρα (c. 25, 1). This torrent-bed by which Salaethus contrived to get into Mytilene is to be identified in the modern stream of Alissida, which flows at the south of the city and approaches at one place within 150 yards of the ancient wall. It would have been much more difficult for Salaethus to get in from the north, where the main Athenian station was, and the lines of Paches cannot have crossed any stream on that side. Paches may well have supposed that the Alissida was sufficient protection, and may have omitted to build securely across it. The route from Pyrrha naturally brings one out at the head of the Bay of Iero, and thence through the narrow valley of the Alissida.

As regards the Athenian dispositions, the following points are to be observed:—

(1) The first station of the fleet was at Malea, and this continued to serve as the naval base (c. 6, 2).

The στρατόπεδον (c. 5, 2) was, of course, on the coast, close by. Presently a part of the fleet was sent round (περιορμυσάμενοι, c. 6, 1) the peninsula, to keep a watch on the southern harbour. At the same time the northern στρατόπεδον was fortified, and a second fortified camp was established on the mainland on the coast, south-west of the southern harbour.

(2) Paches landed at Malea. When it is said that he built a single wall round the city (c. 18, 4), the meaning is that he built it across the mainland on the western side of the city, from coast to coast, presumably from the northern to the southern στρατόπεδον.

2. THE ESCAPE FROM PLATAEA

The siege of Plataea was begun in June 429 B.C.: the town capitulated in August 427 B.C. The garrison consisted of 400 Plataeans and 80 Athenians. We do not know what the population amounted to, but it was certainly small. We are expressly told that in 431 the least able-bodied part of the population had been removed to Athens. No attempt had been made by Athens to relieve the garrison, in spite of a promise of help couched in the most solemn language. Doubtless the revolt of Lesbos, encouraged by Sparta and Boeotia for the very purpose, had tied the hands of Athens; but, apart from the claims of honour and obligation, it might not unnaturally be thought that the position of Plataea, near the roads from Attica and the Megarid to Thebes, was sufficiently important to demand imperatively an effort on the part of Athens. It must be that Athens, always open to invasion from the south, realized the impossibility of controlling the roads into Boeotia and of striking at Boeotia from that side. Unfortunately for Plataea, it bore no relation to Athenian plans for the war. The siege bulks very big in the pages of Thucydides; but it may be doubted whether Athenian politicians thought it worth while to run a serious risk for the sake of saving the little town. If it were relieved, it must then be garrisoned; and nothing could prevent the Boeotians and Peloponnesians from gathering again to besiege it.¹

The town was razed to the ground; and as the account of Thucydides is lacking in topographical detail, we do not know for certain exactly where on the plateau now occupied with the ruins the town of that time lay. This uncertainty, however, does not seriously affect the account of the escape of the two hundred and twelve (cc. 20 f.).

1. τὸ τεῖχος τῶν Πελοποννησίων (cc. 21, 1; 22, 1, etc.). The double battlemented wall, about a mile, probably, in circumference, was apparently about 100 yards from the wall of the town.² The roof of the wall, with its battlements and towers, formed a continuous gallery, for there was a passage (δίοδος) through every tower, communicating with the intervals (curtains, μεταπύργια) between every pair of towers by means of small doors. The sun-baked bricks of which the wall was built must have been of the standard square pattern, since the besieged were able to calculate exactly the height of the wall by counting the number of the courses in it. The greater part of the wall was covered with whitewash, made from the lime of Cithaeron; but the building had been carried on at various points simultaneously by the soldiers, and some of them had omitted the whitewash. From the indications of date given in the narrative, it is calculated that the whole wall (περιτείχισμα) had been built in about forty days (early autumn of 429 B.C.): no doubt several thousands of the soldiers had been employed in the building. When the work was completed, the greater part of the Peloponnesian forces had been withdrawn. Evidently the intention was to starve the garrison into submission; and for this purpose it was sufficient to leave a guard (φύλακες) to man the wall. Thebes, too, was scarcely two miles off; and it was arranged that, in case of an emergency, assistance should be summoned from there by signal (c. 22, 7). The portion of the guard on duty slept in the space between the two faces of the wall, the remainder were in camp outside the wall; but, in case of an emergency, the men in camp would, of course, hasten to the assistance of the guard, every man to his post (c. 22, 5, 6). From the men in camp, moreover, a picket of 300 men was specially told off to make for the point where the danger seemed to be, the instant any alarm was raised. It will be noticed from the construction of the wall that, if you seized and held any two towers with a few men, it would not be difficult to effect an escape across the intervening space.

² G. B. Grundy, Topography of the battle of Pl., and H. Wagner, Die Belagerung von Pl., compared.

Two little points Thucydides has left to the 'general intelligence,' so to say, of the public. He does not explain what the length of the ladders would have to be in proportion to the ascertained height of the wall—a Greek reader would understand the business of hypotenuse and sides; nor does he mention how the fugitives, having mounted the wall at one side, got down again at the other. But there is no need to suppose that they jumped!

2. τάφροι (cc. 22, 1; 23, 2, 3, 4; 24, 1). There was a ditch both within and without the wall of circumvallation. It appears that the inner ditch had not much water in it; no more, evidently, than was easily forded if the ice on it gave way (cf. c. 22, 1, 5 with c. 23, 5). On the other hand, the ditch on the outer side was very full and difficult to cross. The difference is natural, because the outer ditch would receive the water brought down from the northern slopes of Cithaeron. The bricks for building the wall were made of the clay dug out from the ditches.

3. (a) ἡ ἐς Θήβας φέρουσα ὁδός, (b) ἡ ἐπ' Ἀθηναίων ὁδός (c. 24, 1, 2). It is tolerably clear that the Plataean fugitives left the town at the NE corner, from which point the descent is somewhat steep to the plain.¹ They then turned to the left, and struck the direct road from Plataea to Thebes. A Theban party meanwhile was hurrying off along the road that led from Plataea to the Oak's Heads Pass, and which joined the main road from ¹ When Thucydides says that they 'had the Chapel of Androcrates,' the Plataean hero, 'on the right,' it must by no means be assumed that they passed the Chapel. The statement is merely an indication of the road taken. As Munro, J. of Hell. Stud. 1904, p. 158, rightly says, Thucydides means that they went by the road that runs to the left of the Chapel, and not by that which led into the main road from Megara to Thebes. For the Chapel see Woodhouse, J. of Hell. Stud. 1898, p. 38.

Thebes to Athens.¹ They had, of course, chosen the ordinary road from Plataea to Athens, which they assumed that the fugitives had taken. After the fugitives had gone two-thirds of a mile towards Thebes, they turned off to the right that they might join the road leading from Erythrae into the main road at Hysiae and thence to the Oak's Heads. They, however, did not continue along the main road from Hysiae and cross the pass, but 'took to the hills' and so escaped to Athens.

3. THE TROUBLES IN CORCYRA

Two naval engagements had been fought between the Corinthian and Coreyrean fleets near the islands called Sybota in 433 B.C. Neither battle had a decisive result; but in the second the Corinthians made over a thousand prisoners. The majority were slaves, and were sold; but two hundred and fifty were men of importance in Corcyra. These men were treated with consideration in Corinth, and every effort was made to win them over to the Peloponnesian cause. What happened in Corcyra between this time and the date of the events recorded in III. 70-81 we do not know. Thucydides mentions Coreyrean ships as forming part of the Athenian navy; but it is apparent that the defensive alliance formed with Athens was not interpreted by Corcyra as imposing on her an obligation to put forth any great effort for the assistance of her ally. During the first years of the war the Peloponnesians were, of course, too weak at sea to attempt to force ¹ If at Eleutheræ, the name Oak's Heads, as Munro l.c. suggests, must have covered more than the Eleutheræ Pass.

Coreyra to abandon her alliance with Athens. Even if the island remained passive, the friendship of Coreyra was very precious to the side that enjoyed it; for the island is the half-way house, as it were, in the 'coasting voyage' to Italy and Sicily; her navy was strong; her power on the opposite mainland was great.

How long the prisoners remained at Corinth we do not know. But well before 428 B.C. the purpose of Corinth had been so far achieved that the men undertook, in return for their liberty, to induce their fellow-citizens to change sides. The prisoners belonged to the aristocracy of Coreyra, whose wealth was derived from trade; and in order to make their release seem natural, it was pretended that each man was to pay the great ransom of four to five talents. The restored citizens set to work, and gradually made such an impression that, when rival embassies from Athens and Corinth appeared on the scene, and the question was debated what line Coreyra should take, the majority voted for a compromise: the existing defensive alliance (ἐπιμαχία) with Athens was to be maintained; but so also was friendship with the Peloponnesians. As a help towards understanding the account of the party struggles that ensued, the following notes, together with the map of Coreyra, will be found useful:—

NOTES TO THE MAP OF CORCYRA

1. The ancient city of Coreyra lay not on the site of the modern town, but on the peninsula to the south of it. The remains are very scanty, and many sites are uncertain. The narrative of Thucydides, however, gives valuable clues in several cases.

2. The two harbours—the Hyllaic and that 'by the agora towards the mainland' (c. 72, 3)—may be regarded as identified beyond doubt. Later authors name the latter the harbour of Alcinous. The position of the Agora is fixed with confidence, on the evidence of the ground and of the inscription found there, and now in the British Museum¹—in the low ground on the south of the harbour, at the foot of a hill. The Arsenal must in consequence (c. 74, 2) have been on the south shore of the harbour. It is probable, however, on the one hand, that in ancient times the harbour extended rather farther inland on the south side than it does now; and, on the other, that some low rocks at the extreme south-east corner projected farther northwards into the sea.

3. There has been much discussion as to the identification of the unnamed 'Island before the Heraeum' (c. 75, 5). Many have fixed on Ptychia (now Vido); but the best authorities² are now agreed that the site is to be found in the modern citadel of Corfu, which is separated by a canal from the mainland. We must suppose that in ancient times what is now the citadel was a natural or artificial island.

4. The Heraeum, i.e. the temple and τέμενος of Hera Acria (of the Height), appears from the narrative to have been inside the city (cf. especially c. 79, 1, and the only position that fulfils all the conditions is the hill nearest to the harbour of Alcinous.

5. The position of the Acropolis is quite uncertain. But it must have been on a height that commanded the Hyllaic harbour.

6. The τέμενος of Zeus and that of Alcinous, and the shrine of Dionysus, cannot be located. The shrine of the Dioscuri would seem, from c. 75, to have been near the part of the harbour of Alcinous in which Nicostratus anchored.

² The slight remarks of Th. Reinach in Rev. des Ét. grec. x. p. 149 cannot outweigh the opinions of B. Schmidt and Partsch.

4. DEMOSTHENES IN AETOLIA AND AMPHILOCHIA

The plans of Pericles for the prosecution of the war with the Peloponnesian confederacy did not die with his death. Until the capture of the Spartan prisoners at Spacteria in 425 B.C., beyond the time reached in this book, all the items of his policy were still carried out. Attica was still abandoned when the Peloponnesians invaded it; fleets were still dispatched to make descents on the Peloponnesian coasts; a sharp look-out on the conduct of the allies was still kept up. But Athens went farther than this: she combined with the defensive policy pursued by Pericles an offensive policy, which had for its object the isolation of the Peloponnese. It is not to be doubted that this design was itself the logical outcome of the Periclean policy. He had himself aimed at closing the sea against the Peloponnesians, at cutting off their corn-supplies at the sources. Pericles had never contemplated a defensive policy at sea; even the intervention in Sicily (c. 86) was only a violation of Periclean maxims in so far as it was an experiment preparatory to a scheme of conquest.

But what is entirely new is the design of striking at the Peloponnesians on land; and this design is due to one man, Demosthenes, the most capable leader that Athens produced in the war, after Pericles and Alcibiades. Some years before the outbreak of the war Athens had made alliance with most of Acarnania. There was a fierce rivalry for the trade of this region. The Corinthian towns, Ambracia, Leucas, Anactorium, were the backbone of the Peloponnesian power here. In 429 B.C. the confederacy had made an abortive attempt to win Acarnania. It is not surprising that, as soon as

Athens was free to counter this attack, she made the attempt. The fall of Mytilene and Plataea opened the way to the resumption of the offensive at sea. The outcome of the disturbances in Coreyra, which then immediately claimed attention, was favourable to Athens, for an offensive and defensive alliance with that island replaced the defensive alliance. We need not follow the actions in Sicily nor the undertakings of Nicias, which were conducted on Periclean lines. Demosthenes, too, with his fleet of thirty ships, was sent out in accordance with the regular plan—merely to make the usual descents on the Peloponnesian coasts, and to look to the Athenian interests in the west of Greece. Instead, he formed the bold design of attacking Boeotia from the west side with the help of a great army raised in Acarnania, Locri, and Phocis.¹

When his rash and disastrous invasion of Aetolia brought this design to a premature end, the Aetolians took occasion to make an attempt on Naupactus. Eurylochus the Spartan led 3000 men from Heraclea to their support. Uniting with them, he ravaged the land of Naupactus. Demosthenes was still there, for he had not ventured to return home. But he had profited by his errors, and his conduct of the campaign that ensues in Amphilochia is in marked contrast with his previous foolhardiness. Not only did he save Naupactus, but he frustrated the second attempt of the Peloponnesians to get Acarnania, and shattered the power of Ambracia, which was the centre of the Peloponnesian influence in that region. Knowledge of these stirring events was evidently gained by Thucydides from the adventurous soldier himself.

1. τῶν Μεσσηνίων χάριτι πεισεῖς (c. 95, 1; cf. cc. 94, 3; 97, 1). Thucydides seems anxious not to throw the blame for the scheme of Aetolian conquest on Demosthenes. He lays stress on the insistence of the Messenians. It must be admitted that the gallant garrison of Naupactus had a special claim to consideration. But the further design, the invasion of Boeotia by land from the west, was due to Demosthenes alone. It is clear that he himself came to see that the thing was impracticable. Two years later, he again took up the project of invading Boeotia; but this time he approached it by sea from Naupactus. He had awoken from his dream.

2. τὰ κατ' Ἀμπρακίαν (c. 115). It is evident (c. 113, 6) that the adventure of Demosthenes in Amphilochia touched the imagination of Thucydides, as well it might. The drama, as unfolded by him, is easily followed, the only serious difficulty being that we do not know which of two sites is Argos and which is Crenae. Expressing the episodes of the story in terms of the drama, we might analyze as follows:—

Prologue: Olpae seized—Argos and Crenae garrisoned. Act I.: Eurylochus across Acarnania, with Demosthenes at his heels. Act II.: Battle before Olpae. Act III.: The compact and its sequel—the massacre—the flight to Agraeis. Act IV.: The Ambraciots ambushed in the hills. Act V.: The herald.¹

¹ Prof. Bury's opinion that the account of the Acarnanian operations is tedious is to me very surprising (Ancient Greek Historians, p. 157). I should have said that it is Thucydides at his best in narrative; but perhaps a long course of Xenophon has warped my judgment!

III. STYLE AND DICTION

THE following notes, based on Lange, Chambry, and Lamberton,¹ are intended to help towards an appreciation of the style and diction of Thucydides. They deal with the things that must be taken into consideration in any attempt to estimate his merits or shortcomings.

I. Influence of Rhetoric, especially of Gorgias, the creator of the self-conscious 'antithetic' style.

Antithesis, most frequent in speeches and in reflective passages, such as cc. 82, 83; see especially the series of contrasts in c. 82, 4-5. Antithesis is often combined with or assisted by--

(a) An intentional echo in the sound of contrasted words, as cc. 43, 4 ὑπεύθυνον τὴν παραίνεσιν ἔχοντας πρὸς ἀνεύθυνον τὴν ἡμετέραν ἀκρόασιν: 63, 3 αἰσχρὸν ἦν προδοῦναι τοῖς ἐνεργέταις· πολὺν δέ γε αἰσχίον . . "Ελλήνας καταπροδοῦναι: 64, 5 ἐς τὸν ἡμέτερόν τε ἀκούσιον μῆδισμόν καὶ τὸν ἡμέτερον ἐκούσιον ἀττικισμόν: cf. cc. 37, 4; 39, 2; 82, 4.

(b) Drawing together contrasted words, as c. 32, 2 ὀλίγους μὲν αὐτὸν τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐς φιλίαν πρῶσάξουσθαι, πολὺν δὲ πλείους τῶν φίλων πολεμίους ἐξεῖν: 38, 1 ὁ γὰρ παθὼν τῷ δράσαντι . . ἐπ-εξέρχεται: or, less frequently, by separating them widely, as in c. 36, 6 βιαιότατος τῶν πολιτῶν τῷ τε δήμῳ παρὰ πολὺ ἐν τῷ τότε πιθανώτατος.

A false form of Antithesis, where single words are contrasted and there is no real contrast between the clauses in which they stand, is unpleasantly frequent; e.g. c. 13, 5 ὃ γὰρ δοκεῖ μακρὰν ἀπεινὰ ἢ Λέσβος, τὴν ὠφελίαν αὐτῷ ἐγγύθεν παρέξει: and so with ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ and δι' ἣν ἢ Ἀττικῇ in the next sentence.

Prodicus also, that sophist who first taught the careful definition of words and distinction of apparent synonyms, and whose style is amusingly taken off by Plato in the Protagoras, had a marked influence on the style of Thucydides. See, for example, c. 39, 2. Writing under this influence, Thucydides is fond of making a speaker found an argument on the proper use of a term that is apt to be loosely used; or, again, on the proper time for allowing one's conduct to be influenced by ἔλεος, δικαιοσύνη, τὸ ξυμφέρον, τὸ δίκαιον, and the like (cf. c. 40, 1-2).

So much is said about the pregnant brevity of Thucydides, his economy of words is so noticeable, and even his tendency to omit a whole step in an argument, that we are apt to overlook his tendency to redundancy and pleonasm. Phrases like τὸ πρῶτον ἄρχεισθαι and ἣν ἐπ-εσβάλητε τὸ δεύτερον (c. 13, 4) are frequent; or, again, like this: τὸ οὖν μεταξὺ τοῦτο, οἱ ἐκκαίδεκα πόδες (c. 21, 2). But most remarkable is the frequent reiteration of the same idea by his speakers. They really make very few points, but they keep turning the same thought over and over, regarding it from different points of view, putting it in different ways. This tendency, too, is no doubt a result of studying the new rhetoric.

II. The Antithetic style is opposed on the one hand to the running style (λέξις εἰρομένη) of Herodotus, where the sentences may be of any length, and 'run on' in a natural manner. Thucydides himself writes in the running style often enough in the narrative parts of his work. Indeed, that style is the basis of his manner in narrative; but he likes to colour it with his special devices—antithesis, ellipse, anacoluthon, accumulation of participles, abstract nouns, article with neuter adj. or participle. The Antithetic style is equally remote from the periodic style of Isocrates and Demosthenes: it co-ordinates clauses (parataxis) where we look for dependence of clause on clause. Thucydides does continually write periods of a sort; but, as Prof. Lamberton rightly says, 'the bond of union [between the parts] is lax and mechanical, and the sentence if long breaks up as easily and completely as if there had been no attempt to hold it together.' The opening sentence of Diodotus' speech forms a true period, and is noted as an exception.

III. Diction.

(a) Attic Prose had not much of a tradition behind it at the time when Thucydides wrote. The development of poetry is notoriously anterior to the development of prose; and at that early stage in prose composition the traditions of epic and tragic poetry and of the older Ionic prose writing were sure to make a deep impression on an Attic prose writer.

Examples of Epic words: ἀλκή (30), δοῦπος (22), ἐσσάμενος, περικτίονες (104).

Tragic: ἀλωσις (51), ἀθέτητος (58), χριῖζω (109).

Ionic: ἐξαπιναιῶς (3, etc.) and ἐξαπίνης (89), νομίζω = χρῶμαι.

(b) The frequency of nouns in -σις, -τής, and -μα formed from verbs is extraordinary.

Nouns in -σις express action: c. 82, 3-4 yields a cluster of them. Other instances are ἐλευθέρωσις and καταδοῦλωσις (10), δόκησις, προσποίησις (82), προτίμησις (82). They are often used in periphrasis with ποιεῖσθαι, or for the passive γίγνεσθαι: τὴν παράδοσιν ἐποίησάμεθα (53).

Nouns in -τής express the occupation, function of a person; but often in Thucydides they show the intellectual or moral characteristic: σωφρονιστής (65), διαλυτής (82, 5); with εἶναι or γίγνεσθαι these express the agent.

Nouns in -μα: προκάλυμμα (67, 6), πρόσχημα (82, 4), φρόνημα (45).

The use of such nouns is part of the general tendency to prefer the abstract noun to the concrete verbal form. The substantives are reinforced by (a) neut. adj. with article: see cc. 82, 4, 6, 7, 8; 83, 1-3; and (b) the neut. partic. with article, as ἐν τῷ διαλλάσσοντι τῆς γνώμης (10, 1).

(c) Co-ordination of dissimilars is very frequent, sometimes in the case of single words, as in μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἡσυχαιτέρα (82, 2); more often in the case of phrases and clauses, as in τῶν λιμένων τὴν χῶσιν . . . ἐπέμενον τελεσθῆναι, καὶ ὅσα ἐκ τοῦ Πόντου ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι (2, 2): οὐ σκοποῦντες ὅτι τυραννίδα ἔχετε τὴν ἀρχὴν καὶ πρὸς ἐπιβουλεύοντας αὐτοὺς (37, 2), ἐσθήμασί τε καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις νομίμοις. ὅσα τε ἡ γῆ ἡμῶν ἀνεοίδου ὥραϊα . . . ἐπιφέροντες (58, 4): ἐξαπιναιῶς καὶ οὐ προσδεχομένων (34, 3); cf. cc. 53, 3 (personal and impersonal combined); 82, 8; 86, 3.

(d) Anacoluthon, free structure. The following common varieties are to be noticed:—

1. Transition from subordinate to principal sentence : as ἐν μὲν εἰρήνῃ οὐκ ἂν ἐχόντων πρόφασιν . . πολемуμένων δὲ . . αἱ ἐπαγωγαὶ

. . ἐπορίζοντο (82, 1); cf. c. 36, 2.

2. A participle is put in the gen. abs., though it refers to the subject or object of a verb, as βοηθησάντων ἰμῶν προθύμως πόλιν προσ-λήψεσθε (13, 7).
3. A partic. is added in nom. though it applies to a word in a different case, as ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς . . ἀποκτεῖναι . . ἐπικαλοῦντες (36).
4. A change of construction may result from the insertion of a passage in parenthesis (Thuc. is prone to parenthesis, e.g. cc. 38, 1; 39, 2; 57, 1); and, in a long and complicated sentence, an easy indifference to grammatical exactness is shown. A striking case is c. 34, 3, where ὁ μὲν ἐξῆλθε. ὁ δὲ . . εἶχεν replaces ἐξελθόντα αὐτὸν . . εἶχεν.
5. A word is placed as if it were to belong to two clauses, but when the second arrives, the word is abandoned : as παράδειγμα αὐτοῖς οὐτε . . ἐγένοντο . . οὐτε ἡ παροῦσα εὐδαιμονία παρέσχεν ὄκνον (39, 3); cf. cc. 67, 6 ἀμύνατε : 71, 1 ταῦτα : 96, 3.

(e) The subject of a verb is contracted or expanded in meaning as the sentence proceeds. This happens, for example, more than once in the narrative of the Coreyrean disturbances, as in c. 81, 2, where, though the subject is Κερκυραῖοι, the verb presently applies only to the democratic party among the Coreyreans. It is common also to subdivide a substantive by apposition with μὲν . . δέ, as in c. 13, 3 νῆες . . αἱ μὲν . . αἱ δέ.

(f) The order of words is accommodated to the order of the thoughts, the position being fixed according to their relative importance in the writer's mind. The following are so frequent as to deserve separate notice:—

1. Accusative at beginning, indicating the principal theme of the sentence, as in καὶ τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολήν . . (15, 1); cf. c. 113, 6.
2. A governing conjunction is postponed to words that are prominent, as in καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι . . . ὡς ἑώρων (4, 1); cf. c. 5, 1.
3. A nom. substantive may stand as a signal before a pron., when an emphatic statement is to be made about it, as in πάθος γὰρ τοῦτο . . (113, 6).
4. Gen. or dat. is put before the words from which it takes its construction, as in τῆς Καρίας ἐκ Μυοῦντος ἀναβάς (19, 2); the position of αὐτῶν and αὐτοῖς in this matter is often noteworthy.

(g) Accumulation of participles in a sentence is a striking feature of the style. Sometimes successive stages are marked by them (cc. 16, 1; 74, 3); often they are in different relationship to the main action. They may be joined by καί, as in cc. 3, 4; 55, 2; or they may be without connecting link, as in cc. 59, 1; 110, 1.

IV. THE SPEECHES

1. ALREADY in ancient times Thucydides is commended as the first historian who composed true speeches—δημηγορίαι.¹ He has told us what method he followed: 'I have made every speaker say what seemed to me most appropriate on each occasion, taking care to keep as close as I could to the spirit of what was actually said.' If it is asked why Thucydides inserts these set speeches, the true answer is probable that oratory was in his day advancing rapidly in importance and in technical excellence, and that the δημηγορία, the λόγος, held in Athenian life a place as important as that held by the πρᾶξις or ἔργον. Already in Herodotus the persons speak, but in an informal, conversational manner. Direct speech in history was but a legacy received from epic poetry. Naturally, influence and power of political discourse were enormously enhanced by the appearance of rhetoric. The age of Pericles did not regard Themistocles as a great orator: even Pericles did not, so Plutarch says, write out his speeches for the Assembly: but he was probably the last great statesman who did not do so. Rhetoric found direct speech already existing in Ionic history, and naturally it exerted as powerful an influence in the domain of Attic history as it exerted on Attic oratory.

2. In manner, too, Herodotus had followed the usage of epic. His speeches and dialogues have the simplicity and grace of the Homeric discourses; even the longer ones 'have the conversational tone rather than the rhetorical.'¹ It cannot be said that there is no display of rhetoric in the discourses of Herodotus; but it is quite clear that his preference was for the simple colloquial manner of the epic heroes. He professes to give the actual words of the speakers; and in the main he makes them talk not that he may present in this way an analysis of motives, but that he may diversify the narrative and retain the attention of his listeners. Thucydides was the first writer to introduce δημηγορίαι proper into history; and the writers on rhetoric regarded him, and him alone, as an orator as well as a historian, thus bearing emphatic testimony to the importance of his speeches in the history of their art.

3. The speeches in Thucydides occupy more than a fifth of the whole work. The occasion chosen for their introduction is always a notable conjuncture in the development of the war; not necessarily, as Sir R. Jebb points out, an occasion of much importance in relation to the war; but always, as we should expect to find in Thucydides, the occasion of some event that he can treat as 'typical of its kind.' In the first book, indeed, all the occasions on which a speech is inserted are in themselves of the first importance. But here, as always, he makes the speeches the means of affording us an insight into the inner motives of action, or into the character and policy of whole states or of political parties. He condenses in a single speech or in the speeches of opposed orators all the reflexions that he thinks appropriate to the situation; and thus the speakers become personifications of that political idea which inspired them. The words in which they express the idea are for the most part supplied by Thucydides; the form, the topics, and the structure alike are largely dependent on the popular rhetoric of the day.

4. As regards the form, it is easy to blame Thucydides for the excessive use of the rhetorical figures of language. These are the σχήματα Γοργία remarked by the Scholiasts and the ancient commentators in general; μειρακιώδεις σχηματισμοί and θεατρικὰ σχήματα Dionysius calls them. The commonest of these figures is, of course, the antithesis. Now it is hardly reasonable to complain just because this figure is frequent in Thucydides; and perhaps nobody would do so had it not received a bad name as one of the 'Gorgian' tricks. Thucydides deals with a subject that is full of contrasts. There is the contrast between Ionian and Dorian, Athenian and Spartan; between pretence and reality, promise and fulfilment; and Thucydides was bound to bring these contrasts out. But in the speeches where all the 'figures' are naturally most frequent, he sometimes lets a feeling for antithesis carry him into verbal contrasts that contain little or no substance. It was the fashion of the day, and Thucydides followed it at times only too faithfully.¹ Unfortunately, too, he does not always rest content with the antithetic form

pure and simple. With antithesis he occasionally combines those less desirable 'figures,' such as paromoiosis or jingle in the sound of whole clauses, and pariosis or equality in the length of clauses; but such trivialities are less common in him than in Antiphon, for example, or Isocrates, and they are certainly not numerous enough to warrant us in saying that Thucydides deliberately aimed at them. It would be fairer to say that he does not always avoid them. One of the minor figures, paronomasia, or jingle in the sound of words, is undoubtedly common even in the descriptions. But it must be remembered that in all Greek literature, from Homer downwards, this paronomasia is common.¹ The practice is so notorious and constant that it may be enough here to point out that ὀδύσσομαι occurs in Homer only and always as in paronomasia with the name Ὀδυσσεύς.² On the whole, in spite of Gorgias, the minor 'figures of language' are no commoner in Thucydides than they are in Homer. Of course Gorgias did not invent the figures; he first taught them. Suidas mentions books περὶ τῶν παρ' Ὀμήρῳ σχημάτων ῥητορικῶν: Aristotle in the Rhetoric goes to Homer (Il. ix. 526) for his example of paromoiosis; and in the tract de ritu et poesi Homeri, attributed to Plutarch, several examples of the minor figures are collected from the Iliad and Odyssey. As for the other class of 'figures,' the figures of thought, such as irony, the rhetorical question, asyndeton, anaphora, they are so παπαχρήμα! On the other hand, I do not think we can say that antithesis is foreign to the nature of the grave style. We must distinguish between this and the minor σχήματα λέξεως.

seldom used by Thucydides that they do not count as characteristic of his style.

5. In the choice and arrangement of his subject matter he is never the slave of rhetoric. He gives us, of course, the ordinary *exordium*¹ (προοίμιον), argumentatio (ἀγῶνες), and peroratio (ἐπίλογος). He uses, too, the rhetorical commonplaces, such as honour (τὸ καλόν), interest (τὸ συμφέρον), justice (τὸ δίκαιον); and in handling these he has always at command an extraordinary abundance of arguments and aphorisms that surpasses anything to be found elsewhere in Greek oratory. His power of invention wrings from Dionysius an emphatic eulogy; to us it becomes at times actually wearisome,² the same materials being grouped again and again in different shapes, as in a kaleidoscope.

Ipsae illae contiones, says Cicero of Thucydides' speeches, ita multas habent obscuras abditasque sententias, ut ut intelligantur. In the speeches much more often than the narrative, ἀσαφὲς γίγνεται τὸ βραχύ. The sentences are overloaded with ideas, they are complicated by the intrusion of numerous clauses which stand in various relations to the main construction. It is not that he is incapable of writing clearly when he comes to write a speech; nothing, for example, could be more clearly expressed than the last speech in his history, the magnificent address delivered by Nicias during the retreat from Syracuse. But unfortunately he shows too often a preference for the complicated over the simple form of expression; he likes to write in long, straggling, ill-balanced periods that contrast strangely with their machine-turned antithesis, and the rhymes and jingles in the clauses.

6. Of the speeches contained in the Third Book, those delivered for and against the Mytileneans were probably heard by Thucydides. The violent statements attributed to Cleon, and his imitation of Periclean oratory accord with all that is known of him. As for the unknown Diodotus, we may suppose that everything urged on behalf of the Mytileneans during the debate is condensed into his speech. On the other hand, Prof. Bury thinks that much of the matter contained in both speeches is 'purely Thucydidean'—all the reflexions, in fact, on the theory of punishment; and he points out, what is doubtless true, whether it is what Cleon said or what Thucydides thought that Cleon might have said, that there is in Cleon's speech a covert attack on the character of Pericles as an idealist.

In the Olympian address and in the speeches of the Plataean and the Theban, Thucydides must have gone to work with greater freedom.

The digression on party strife in the Greek states must be reckoned along with the speeches. It is written in the same tortuous, artificial style in which large parts of the speeches are written; and we may surmise that if any speaker had been available for the purpose, the author would have attributed these reflexions to him instead of giving them in his own character. How far Thucydides sometimes goes in putting his own thoughts into the mouth of another is to be seen in the First Book, where Pericles, speaking in the Athenian Assembly, is made to answer step by step a forecast of the war given at Sparta by a Corinthian whose speech he had not heard.

In the speech of Diodotus¹ we have the earliest discussion of the Sophistic Theory of Punishment as a deterrent; and the reflexions on Party Strife are packed with allusions to the five cardinal virtues of the Sophists—Courage, Justice, Wisdom, Temperance, and δσιότης or εὐσέβεια.

¹ Mr. F. M. Cornford has some very interesting comments on this speech in his Thucydides mythistoricus.

V. MANUSCRIPTS AND TEXT

THE seven MSS. that are of importance for determining the text of Thucydides fall into two groups:—

1. Laurentianus, C; in the Laurentian library at Florence, on parchment, 27 lines to the page. Date between 900 and 950; the oldest MS., and, on the whole, the best. The first six pages, down to c. 15, 1 νήσους are by a later hand.

Munacensis, G; in Munich library, quarto on paper. 13th century. The upper margin of the page is destroyed; hence the sign [G] means that, in the place referred to, the reading of this MS. is lost.

2. Vaticanus, B; in the Vatican library; small folio on parchment, 30 to 32 lines on a page. 11th century. Not decisively inferior to C, but with its companions derived, in the first two books, from a different recension of the text. From III. to VI. 92 it does not differ nearly so often (the proportion is 1 to 4) from the C group, and is probably a descendant of the same recension. From VI. 92 to the end B differs widely from all the other MSS.

Augustanus, F; large folio on parchment. Dated 1301. Formerly at Augsburg, now at Munich.

Cisulpinus or Itulus, A; at Paris, large folio on parchment. 11th or 12th century. It was lost from 1815 to 1869, and rediscovered by R. Prinz in the National Library.

Palatinus, E; at Heidelberg; large folio on parchment. 11th century. The only good MS. that contains the two Lives.

Britannicus, M: in the British Museum; quarto on parchment, 27 lines to the page. 11th century. This MS. belongs on the whole to the second group, but it often agrees with the first against BAEF.

In fixing the text, the readings of B and C are of course the most important. It happens that C is more often confirmed by the text of Dionysius than B; and there is a suspicion that readings peculiar to B are sometimes the result of conjecture. In a passage where CG have one reading, BAEFM another, it is best to choose the reading of CG if both are equally acceptable; and if, as sometimes happens, E or M agree with CG, the claims of the reading to preference are strengthened.

The other sources from which the text can be occasionally corrected are the long quotations in Dionysius, the Scholia (only a small portion of which are of any considerable authority), and the numerous citations from Thucydides or else imitations in later writers, rhetoricians, grammarians and the Scholia to Homer, Aristophanes, and other authors. There is no sufficient reason for supposing that the MSS. of Thucydides are specially corrupt. There are very numerous small mistakes; the insertion or omission of short words, such as $\tau\acute{\epsilon}$, $\delta\acute{\epsilon}$, $\sigma\tau\iota$, is frequent. But the MSS. are an average lot; not one of them is of great merit—there is nothing like the Bodleian Plato, for example, or the Paris Anabasis: but we may be confident that they yield between them a very fair text exhibiting in general only those forms of error that become familiar to readers of Greek manuscripts. The present editor, at least, readily confesses that a larger acquaintance with MSS. has caused him to withdraw entirely from the opinion of those who detect incessant interpolations and wholesale corruptions in these very ordinary MSS.

NOTES

§ 1 l. 1. θέρους—Thuc. divides the year into θέρος, consisting of about eight months (Elaphebolion to Pyanepsion) and χειμών, consisting of about four (Maimaeterion to Anthesterion). 1

2. ἅμα τῷ σίτῳ ἀκμάζοντι—‘just when the corn was ripening’; about the middle of May, 428 B.C., before the harvest (καρποῦ ξυγκομιδῇ).

§ 2 l. 6. ἐγκαθεζόμενοι—the form serves as an aorist as well as a present.

7. ὥσπερ εἰώθεσαν—sc. γίγνεσθαι, in the two previous invasions. The plan had been started by Pericles.

8. ὅπη παρείκοι—impers., though strictly ὁ θεός is the subject implied.

τὸν πλείστον ὄμιλον—cf. II. 31 ὁ ἄλλος ὄμιλος ψιλῶν, ‘the main body.’ Outside Thuc. ὄμιλος is found only in Herod., in tragedy, and in late authors.—The wasting of the country was a tedious task that would devolve naturally on the light-armed troops.

9. εἶργον τὸ μὴ—for the constr., which is common with verbs and phrases signifying prevention (Aesch. PI. 252 ἐξελευσάμην βροτοῖς | τὸ μὴ . . . μολεῖν, and often in Aesch.) cf. VI. 1 διείργεται τὸ μὴ ἡπειρος εἶναι (where the ms. οὔσα is shown by many imitations of the sentence by later authors to be a mistake).

τῶν ὀπλῶν=τοῦ στρατοπέδου, strictly the space in front of the quarters where the arms were stacked; here the word marks the fact that the light-armed could not with safety be withdrawn from the hoplites.

10. τὰ ἐγγὺς τῆς πόλεως—i.e. houses, trees, vineyards: we are not to suppose that the Athenians cropped their lands annually for the benefit of the Peloponnesian invaders.

11. οὗ—the gen. as in μισθὸς τριῶν μηνῶν. The enemy remained in Attica about thirty days: the longest invasion, that of 430 B.C., lasted forty days, the shortest, in 425 B.C., fifteen days.

2 § 1 l. 2. Λέσβος ἀπέστη—the gravity of this event lay in the fact that Lesbos and Chios were the only two islands in the Aegean that retained the position of independent allies of Athens. These furnished manned ships, but not infantry or money. For the narrative see Introd. p. xiii.

Μηθύμνης—Methymna, the second town in Lesbos, was under a democracy, Mytilene under an oligarchy.

3. βουλευθέντες agrees κατὰ σύνεσιν with Λέσβος: this change, in the case of peoples, is especially common in Thuc.; and cf. c. 67, 3 ἡλικία . . ῶν. So with στρατιά, στράτευμα.

§ 2 l. 7. τῶν . . τῇν serve for all three pairs of nouns.

8. χῶσιν—the harbours were to be turned into λιμένες κληστοί (II. 94, 4): walls were carried across the mouth on artificial moles, and the narrow opening left could be closed with a chain.

9. ἐπέμενον—showing why they had put off the revolt. The constr. with ἐπιμένειν is here double: (1) τῇν . . ποίησιν τελεσθῆναι, as in VII. 20 περιέμενε τὸν Χαρικλέα . . παραλαβεῖν: (2) ὅσα . . ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι, an accusative clause. (It is objected that Thuc. elsewhere uses ἐπιμένειν only as intrans., but he uses e.g. μένω and ὑπο- in both ways; and why not ἐπι-?)

11. τοξότας—as mercenaries.

12. μεταπεμπόμενοι ἦσαν—cf. I. 99 ἦσαν . . ἄρχοντες, II. 80 ἦσαν . . συμπροθυμούμενοι. Of course, the periphrasis with pres. partic. is much less common than with perf., but it is not different in principle. Passages like II. 67 ὃν ἦν στράτευμα πολιορκοῦν ‘where there was a blockading army’ are quite different, the partic. not belonging to the verb. In yet another case, like I. 38 τοῖς πλείοσιν ἀρέσκοντές ἐσμεν, the partic. is a predicative adj.

§ 3 l. 14. ιδία—in contrast with what the government was doing κοινῇ.

κατά—often of the motive or reason, e.g. II. 87 συμπαρογενομένων κατὰ φιλίαν.

πρόξενοι—the fact that there were more representatives of Athens than one at Mytilene might show that the office was hereditary in a family, but more probably the title of πρόξενος καὶ εὐεργέτης had been granted by Athens to members of different Mytilenean families. Aristotle in Pol. 1304a says that Dexander ἤρξε τῆς στάσεως καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους παρώξυνε πρόξενος ὢν: he had a private quarrel with a member of the aristocratic party; from this small matter πολλῶν ἐγένετο ἀρχὴ κακῶν. In any case it would have been the duty of the Proxenus to inform Athens of movements in Mytilene unfavourable to her interests even before the war; but doubtless the quarrel was now an exasperating motive to him, and led directly to the outbreak of stasis, for it was a dispute about property and inter-marriage between families of the opposed parties.

16. ξυνοικίζουσι—i.e. attempting to make the island into a single πόλις under one government, and in this case, an oligarchy.

18. ξυγγενῶν—Lesbos being of Boeotian (Aeolic) origin. To intervene on behalf of kinsmen was under all circumstances deemed justifiable among Greek states.

19. εἰ μή τις—‘unless they mean to,’ the fut. indic. marking the urgency; cf. VIII. 91 εἰ μή τις ἤδη φυλάσσεται.

3. ἄρτι καθισταμένου—‘just becoming established’ (i.e. settled, chronic). Cf. I. 1 ἀρξάμενος (ξίγγράψαι) εὐθὺς καθισταμένου. If we render thus, it makes no difference whether Thuc. means the ten years’ or the twenty-seven years’ war. In either case, ἀκμάζοντος shows that ‘in its infancy’ is wrong. But Classen’s ‘in the middle period’ seems impossible: for it is inconceivable that καθισταμένου τοῦ πολέμου should mean either ‘just beginning,’ as he understands I. 1, or ‘in the middle’ at will. In V. 25 εὐθὺς ἄλλη ταραχὴ καθίστατο the verb means not merely ‘arose,’ but ‘tended to become permanent,’ applying to a period, not to a moment.

ἀκμάζοντος—ἄρτι does not extend to this. A period of ἀκμή is of course meant. Athens was now beginning to feel the strain on her finances (see c. 19); and her position in Chalcidice was very precarious. (Vollgraff proposes to add ἤδη before ἀκμάζοντος, but this is not necessary.)

7. μείζον μέρος νέμοντες—‘attaching greater importance to their wish that it was not true’ (than to the allegations). For ἀληθῆ cf. I. 8 πλωιώτερα ἐγένετο. νέμειν μέρος or μοῖραν several times in tragedy: Aesch. PI. 294, Soph. Trachin. 1238, Eur. Supp. 241; cf. τὸ ἴσον νέμειν I. 71. ἔλασσον νέμειν VI. 88. πλέον v. Eur. Hec. 868, c. 48, 1.

10. παρασκευήν refers of course to the preparations of c. 2, 2 (cf. c. 2, 3).

§ 2 l. 11. εξαπναιώς—like εξαπίνης, found only in Thuc. and Xen. among Attic prose writers (for εξαίφνης or αἰφνιδίως).

12. περὶ Πελοπόννησον πλεῖν—both in 431 and 430 B.C. when the Pel. invaded Attica (II. 23, 56), a fleet had been sent out to make descents on the coast of the Peloponnese, as a counter-move. For the operations of this year see c. 16, 1; for those of 426 B.C. see cc. 91, 94.

§ 3 l. 16. Μαλόεις was a local name of Apollo in Lesbos; its origin is unknown.

17. πανδημεῖ—the whole people together, not by families or clans.

18. ἐλπίδα εἶναι, like εἰκός ἐστι, is commonly followed by pres. or aor. infin. ἐπειχθέντας is conditional.

19. ἦν μὲν ξυμβῇ . . εἰ δὲ μή—a common idiom, found already in Homer; cf. e.g. Plato, Prot. 325 B εἰ μὲν ἐκὼν πείθεται· εἰ δὲ μή.

20. εἰπεῖν—this depends on the sense of 'order' implied in the passage; cf. Andoc. de Myst. § 20 ὁ γὰρ νόμος οὕτως εἶχεν· εἰ μὲν τὰ ληθῇ μνησείε τις, εἶναι τὴν ἄδειαν, εἰ δὲ τὰ ψευδῇ, τεθνάναι. Of course εἰπεῖν = κελεῦσαι. (This passage is brief and peremptory in tone: its dramatic manner is quite characteristic, and there is no ground for suspecting the text.)

§ 4 l. 23. παρὰ σφᾶς—put briefly for παρὰ σφᾶς παραγενόμεναι καὶ παροῦσαι: similarly παρεῖναι is often found with εἰς or ἐπὶ with accus.; but there is no precise parallel to the present case.

25. ἐς φυλακὴν ἐποίησαντο—so VIII. 1 ἐς ἀσφάλειαν ποιείσθαι. Cf. Andoc. de Myst. 117 θιγατέρες αἱ ἐγίγνοντο εἰς τε ἐνὲ καὶ Λέαγρον.

§ 5 l. 27. διαβάς κτλ.—the sentence, containing five participles, is an example of what Dionysius calls τὸ πυκνὸν of Thucydides: Cicero speaks of him as pressus, Quintilian as densus. The participles that denote closely connected parts of the same action are joined by καί.

29. ἐπιτυχών = ὥς ἐπέτυχε.

πλῶ χρησάμενος 'after a good passage.' πλῶ = εὖ πλοία, as in I. 137. (Some make πλῶ χρησάμενος merely = πλεύσας, but Antiphon v. 24 πλοῦς ἡμῶν ἐρίγνωτο καὶ ἀνήγετο πλοῖα ἅπαντα seems decisive.)

§ 6 l. 32. οὔτε . . τε—a common idiom (cf. neque . . que or et), by which emphasis is thrown on the second clause.

τά τε ἄλλα . . ἐφύλασσον—‘and besides (τὰ ἄλλα, adverbial) having protected with rapidly constructed defences all round the half-finished (works) of the walls and docks they guarded them.’ This is the best way of taking this puzzling sentence. None of the changes in the text that have been proposed is an improvement. περί is an adverb= περίξ, as in Homer (Wilamowitz on Eur. HF. 1035).

§ 1 l. 1. οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι—the subject of the subord. verb is put 4 at the head of the sentence to contrast the action of Athenians and Lesbians sharply; a good parallel occurs at VII. 32 οἱ δὲ . . πρέσβεις . . ἐπειδὴ . . ἔμελλον ἄξιον τὸν στρατὸν, ὁ Νικίας . . πέμπει. The imperf., ἑώρων (sc. τὰ γιγνόμενα), is used because the action overlaps that of ἀπήγγειλαν.

§ 2 l. 6. ἀπαράσκειοι qualifies πολεμεῖν, and is therefore co-ordinate with ἐξαίφνης: cf. e.g. I. 39 προύχοντα καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς, and c. 13, 2 θάσσον γεγεννη-αὶ καὶ ἀπαράσκειος.

7. ἐκπλουν τινα—for the use of τις cf. II. 22 ἵππομαχία τις βράχεια ἐγένετο.

8. ναυμαχίαν—both dat. and accus. seem to occur with ὥς ἐπὶ of intention; but the mss. often vary, as here.

9. πρὸ τοῦ λιμένος—i.e. that harbour which was used by the fleet (cc. 3, 6; 6, 1), in which their ships had lain. (Steup's suggestion that τοῦ ἐτέρου λ. should be read is unnecessary.) Presently they were driven back into this same harbour. The northern harbour is meant. See Introd. p. xiv.

ὀλίγον is accus. of space (cf. 104, 2); of time II. 8 ὀλίγον πρὸ τούτων.

11. τὸ παραυτίκα . . ἀποπέμψασθαι—‘get the ships withdrawn for the time being,’ i.e. in order to gain time.

§ 4 l. 15. καί, ‘accordingly.’

17. τῶν διαβαλλόντων—see c. 2, 3. The partic. becomes a subst., as in οἱ ἐπαγόμενοι II. 2, οἱ προδιδόντες II. 5.

19. τὰς ναῦς is not object of πέσειαν, but only subject of ἀπελθεῖν, τὰς ναῦς ἀπελθεῖν being an exact citation of the proposal they would make in the Ecclesia, which was to be for a permanent withdrawal. The constr. is strange, however, and ποιήσειαν has been proposed.

§ 5 l. 23. ἐν τῇ Μαλέᾳ πρὸς β. τῆς πόλεως—the Malea that is known is the SE. point of Lesbos, 70 stadia from the city. A solution of the difficulty has been found, Introd. p. xv. (Those who suppose that the SE. point of the island is meant, take πρὸς β. τῆς πόλεως with ἀποστέλλουσι. But from the narrative that follows, it is clear the A. were lying to the north of the city (esp. c. 6, 1); and it is not likely they were so far distant as 70 stades. Some are driven to suspect that ἐν τῇ Μαλέᾳ may be corrupt or spurious.)

§ 6 l. 24. τοῖς is neut., and προχωρήσειν is expegetie.

26. διὰ τοῦ πελάγους—crossing the Aegean directly instead of sailing down the coast of Asia Minor, between Chios and Erythrae, before crossing among the islands. The alternative routes are clearly explained in Odyssey III. 170 f. and the risks of that across the μέσον πέλαγος are indicated. (Cf. Tozer, Islands of the Aegean, p. 170.)

27. αὐτοῖς prob.=the Lesbians, and is dat. commodi with ἐπρασσον, as in v. 76, where those acting for Sparta at Argos are called οἱ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις πράσσοντες. (Others take αὐτοῖς with ἤξει, or refer it to the Lacedaemonians.)

5 § 1 l. 5. ἔβροθηθήκεσαν—‘were there to aid.’ Thuc. is remarkably partial to the pluperf., as e.g. l. 128 ἐνεγέγραπτο, ‘the contents of the letter were.’

6. Ἰμβριοι καὶ Λήμνιοι—closely associated with the Athenians throughout the war. The islands had been secured for Athenian ‘cleruchs’ by Miltiades; and along with Seyros they were regarded as very peculiarly the possessions of Athens.

§ 2 l. 7. πανδημεί—equivalent to πανστρατιᾷ in this connexion, as II. 31, 1 clearly shows.

9. στρατόπεδον—north of the city, where the fleet was lying.

10. οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔχοντες describes a state of things, like κρατοῦντες, νικῶντες.

11. ἐπηυλίσαντο—‘did not encamp on the field,’ which was necessary to maintain a disputed victory (Bloomfield). What they did and what they felt are here balanced by οὔτε . . . οὔτε.

§ 3 l. 12. ἐκ Πελοποννήσου καὶ μετ’ ἄλλης κτλ.—this appears to stand for εἰ πρ. τι (παρασκευῆς) ἐκ Π. καὶ ἄλλοθεν, ‘to try their fortune with reinforcements from the Pel. and elsewhere, if any should come.’ Bloomfield and others have supposed that καί is intensive here, ‘again with fresh preparations’; but with the order of the text, the sense would necessarily be that some reinforcement had already come from Peloponnese. As for μετ' ἄλλης, they might hope for ships from Megara, Leucas or Ambracia: Thebes had none.

§ 4 l. 15. αὐτοῖς . . ἀφικνεῖται—the dat. with verbs of motion—which is strictly a dat. of interest rather than of motion—is common in poetry, but does not occur in Attic prose outside Thuc.; cf. e.g. Aesch. PI. 35 δ' ἄλλ' ἦλθεν αὐτῷ Ζηνὸς ἄγρυπνον βέλος.

18. μετὰ τὴν μάχην ὕστερον—i.e. they did not get there immediately after the arrival of the A. fleet (c. 4, 1), but only after the battle (§ 2).

§ 1 l. 1. οἱ δέ—co-ordinate with οἱ μὲν ἡσύχαζον.

5. οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν ἀπό—'no sign of energy on the part of.'

6. περιορμισάμενοι τὸ πρὸς νότον—'changing their position and casting anchor south.' As Malea πρὸς βορέαν remained still in their hands as a ναύσταθμον, it is evident that a part only of the ships was sent to this new station. τὸ πρὸς νότον is adverbial as IV. 23 περιώρμονν πλὴν τὰ πρὸς τὸ πέλαγος.

7. ἑκατέρωθεν τῆς πόλεως explaining δύο. Logically Thuc. should have written στρατόπεδον, as there was but one on either side.

§ 2 l. 10. μὴ χρῆσθαι—epexegetic.

11. ναύσταθμον—the roadstead where the supply-ships lay. μάλλον means rather than the new στρατόπεδον south of the town.

15. ἀγορά is Krüger's probable alteration for ἀγορᾶς, on the analogy of such phrases as ἀγορὰν παρέχειν, VII. 39 τὴν ἀγορὰν τῶν πωλουμένων . . ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν κομίσαι. The idea of a site seems always present, and ἀγορά is not a synonym of τὰ ὦνια or τὰ πωλούμενα.

τά is probably subject, not adverbial accus., so that we have the pass. of τὸν περὶ Μ. πόλεμον ἐπολέμουν: cf. VIII. 18 τὸν πόλεμον κοινῇ πολεμοῦντων (imper.). The act. of πολεμῶ does not seem to occur with an adverbial accus.

had been stationed at Naupactus in 430 B.C. to close the Corinthian gulf to Peloponnesian trade, gained two brilliant victories. After the departure of the enemy's fleet, Phormio made an expedition into Aearnania, but was prevented by severe weather from attacking Oeniadae. Early in the spring of this year (428), Phormio returned to Athens; and it is evident that he was now dead or out of health. His statue was placed on the Acropolis and an inscription in his honour was set up at Delphi. (For περί some mss. give ἐς: and perhaps ἐς <τὰ> περί II. was the original form; cf. II. 7, 3. See, however, c. 3, 2.)

6. σφίσι as direct reflexive, referring to the nearer subject, is an Ionic use.

§ 2 l. 8. Λακωνικῆς depends on χωρία.

§ 3 l. 12. ἀναστήσας—the verb occurs in a similar connexion in II. 68 and 96; in IV. 90 ἀναστήσας Ἀθηναίους πανδημί.

14. κατὰ τὸν Ἀχελῷον—‘by way of the A.’; not the technical use of κατὰ meaning ‘down’ a stream (cf. Aeschines II. 124 εἰσπλεῖν κατὰ τὸν Λιδῖαν ποταμόν); Oeniadae was an important town on a hill in marshy ground near the SW. coast of Aearnania W. of the mouth of the Achelous. Cobet conjectured ἀνά for κατά.

20. φρουρῶν—the contrast with αὐτόθεν suggests that these were not Leucadians.

§ 5 l. 22. ἀποπλεύσαντες—i.e. the ships withdrew to Aearnania, and from there the negotiation was carried on.

8 § 1 l. 6. Δωριεύς—a Rhodian athlete, who won prodigious fame and became the typical Olympic victor. He was son of the Diagoras for whom Pindar wrote the seventh Olympian. Besides three Olympian victories he won many at the Isthmian and Nemean games. (References to his career: VIII. 35, Xen. Hell. I. 5, Pausan. II. 7.)

9 § 1 l. 1. καθεστὸς—ms. evidence and analogy favour the form in -ός for the neut.; but etymology (-άος) and the ancient grammarians are for -ώς.

3. τοὺς γάρ—cf. I. 40 τὸν νόμον μὴ καθιστάται ὥστε τοὺς ἐτέρων ἀφισταμένους δέχεσθαι.

5. ἐν ἡδονῇ ἔχουσι—so ἐν αἰτία, ἐν ὀργῇ, ἐν ὀρρωδίᾳ etc., cf. c. 34, 3 and ἐν ἡδονῇ εἶναι I. 99.

7. χείρους—think worse of them for being traitors.

§ 2 l. 8. οὐκ ἄδικος . . ἔστιν, εἰ τύχοιεν—like I. 120 ἀνδρῶν σωφρόνων ἐστίν, εἰ μὴ ἀδικοῖντο, ἡσυχάζειν. Here οὐκ ἄ . .

ἐστιν=δικαίον ἐστὶ χείρους ἡγεῖσθαι, and in such cases (see Goodwin, MT, § 555) the opt. is not seldom found. The idiom should certainly not be regarded as abnormal. Cf. e.g. Plato, Georg. 482 B ἐγώ γε οἶμαι κρείττον εἶναι . . διαφωνεῖν χορὸν ᾧ χορηγοῖην. Bayfield on Antig. 666 collects passages from Soph. Presently διακρίνονται is by assimilation to τίχουσιν.

10. γνώμη—‘feeling,’ ‘sentiment’; εὐνοία, ‘loyalty’ to each other. These words, so frequent in Thuc. and orators, have various shades of meaning: and of γνώμη it would be rash to say that we can always be sure of its precise significance—Classen has discussed γνώμη at length in his Intr.—but here the parallel παρασκευὴ καὶ δύναμις show that the two are closely similar in sense (εὐνοία is the intellectual aspect of γνώμη; and c. 10 ἐν τῷ διαλάσσοντι τῆς γνώμης καὶ αἱ διαφοραὶ τῶν ἔργων, where the meaning of γνώμη is fixed by μετ’ ἀρετῆς δοκούσης and ὁμοιότροποι, bears this out. (εὐνοία of course implies ‘between equals’ here, not loyalty to a superior.) Cf. also c. 12, 1.

§ 3 l. 14. μηδὲ τῷ—here and again at c. 67, 2 there should undoubtedly be only a comma before μηδέ. Thuc. never uses οὐδέ, μηδέ=‘and not,’ unless a neg. clause precedes; and it is quite plain from what precedes—οὐκ ἄδικος αὐτῇ ἡ ἀξίωσις, viz. χείρους ἡγεῖσθαι. εἰ τίχουσιν—that ὁ . . οὐκ ἦν and μηδέ τῷ χείρους δόξωμεν εἶναι adhere closely together.

15. ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς—for Athens: often used of the troubles of war.

§ 1 l. 1. περὶ γὰρ τοῦ δικαίου καὶ ἀρετῆς—to be asking for 10 a ξιμμαχία when you have just abandoned one is a position that needs some justification: so first they will show that they were not guilty of ἀδικία (cf. c. 12, 2) since they were in danger of being ‘enslaved,’ and that they were actuated by the highest of motives, by ἀρετή, unselfishness, regard for others, in that they wanted to ‘free Greece.’ Hence their διπλῇ ἀπόστασις (c. 13, 1) might well commend them to their hearers.—Only one article is used because τὸ δίκαιον and ἀρετή are the two motives combined in the διπλῇ ἀπόστασις.

πρώτον—this ‘first’ point—the question of political morality—occupies in point of fact most of the speech.

4. βέβαιον—always of two terminations in Thuc. Stobaeus gives βεβαίαν here: βέβαιον ἂν has been suggested.

5. μετ’ ἀρετῆς δοκούσης ἐς ἀλλήλους γίνονται—the subject, as Bloomfield saw and so Steup, is ἰδιῶται καὶ πόλεις: many edd. from Poppo onwards understand φιλία καὶ κοινωνία, but ἐς ἀλλήλους is a serious objection to this. It does not seem, however, that a case has been made out for explaining γίγνεσθαι μετὰ 'to behave with' (majority of edd.): in the parallels proposed, such as κατὰ ξιλλόγους γίγνεσθαι, the verb means 'to come into a certain condition or situation': and as γενέσθαι μετὰ τινος = 'to be in the company of' (e.g. Dem. LIV. 34, so μετ' ἀρετῆς γίγνεσθαι should mean 'range themselves with,' and so, 'to adopt,' 'work with' ἀρετή: ἀρετῇ (as above) δοκοῦσα ἐς ἀλλήλους = 'the supposition or assumption of mutual unselfishness, that each in his dealings with the other is acting unselfishly.' So we may render 'unless both begin with the assumption that the other is behaving unselfishly.'

7. τὰλλα ὁμοιότροποι εἶεν—'and in all other respects (besides that just mentioned) be like minded.' Gölter thought φίλοι was to be supplied out of φιλία as subj. to γίγνουντο. Vollgraff thinks γίγνουντο spurious and alters δοκούσης to δοκῆσεως with Herwerden, so that μετ' = 'besides' and καί = 'also.' γίγνουντο and εἶεν are both needed, and are distinct in meaning. So long as the union between Lesbos and Athens was to further the resistance to Persia, both parties to the compact held to the belief that the other was actuated by ἀρετή: but when Athens began to pursue another purpose, Mytilene gave up this belief, and the inherent difference of intention became manifest.

ἐν γὰρ τῷ διαλλάσσουντι τῆς γνώμης—'in animorum discrepantia'; the neut. partic. as abstract subst. (cf. the corresponding διαφοραί) is a favourite device of Thuc., though rare in other prose: Xen. Cyr. IV. 5, 39 τὸ ἐλλείπον. Cf. e.g. II. 59 τὸ ὀργιζόμενον τῆς γνώμης, VII. 68 τῆς γνώμης τὸ θυμούμενον, for ὀργή and θυμός. Thuc. likes to show the quality of work. The constr., as Krüger says, is freely imitated by late authors.

9. καθίστανται—'become manifest'; cf. on c. 3 l. 2.

§ 2 l. 9. ξυμμαχία ἐγένετο—referring to the transference of the hegemony of the allies from Sparta to Athens in 476 B.C. (I. 95). In reality this transference was an ἀπόστασις from the Spartan alliance (Ath. Pol. c. 23); and the anxiety of Sparta to be quit of the war against Persia (ἀπαλλαξέοντες τοῦ Μηδικοῦ πολέμου I. 95) was not shown until after the transference took place. Samos, Chios and Lesbos were at the head of the movement in favour of Athens (Plut. Arist. c. 23). (This passage well illustrates the freedom with which Greek orators habitually manipulate history when they refer to the past.)

10. ἀπολιπόντων ἐκ—this use of ἀπολείπειν seems to result from such phrases as ἀπολείπειν τὴν ξυμμαχίαν (c. 9), so that the full sense is ἀπολιπόντων (ἡμᾶς καὶ ἀπελθόντων).

§ 3 l. 14. Ἀθηναίους and τοῖς Ἕλλησι depend on ξύμμαχοι ἐγενόμεθα: τοῖς Ἕλλησι is the exaggeration of rhetoric; for in reality they entered the Delian confederacy.

§ 4 l. 15. μέχρι—‘so long as,’ a very rare use, not noted in L. & S.; Xen. Hell. i. 1, 6.

19. ἐπαγομένους—this word, very common in Thuc., regularly means ‘to invite,’ ‘call in.’ But here, in contrast with ἀνέντας, it is slightly different, ‘procure for themselves,’ as in ἐπαγωγὴ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων (Herbst).

ἀδεεῖς—‘free from anxiety.’

§ 5 l. 20. διὰ πολυψηφίαν—with ἀδύνατοι ὄντες. Each constituent state had a vote in the synod of the League, but the allies were unable to combine against Athens through their disagreements.

21. ἐδουλώθησαν—i.e. became subject allies. Cf. i. 98 πρώτη αἴτη πόλις ξυμμαχίς (Naxos) παρὰ τὸ καθεστηκός. ἐδουλώθη.

§ 6 l. 25. παραδείγμασι τοῖς προγιγνομένοις χ.—‘drawing our proofs (that they were no longer πιστοί) from what was previously happening,’ i.e. ‘taking warning from the line of action that they had adopted.’ παράδειγμα is an example by which a conclusion may be supported. τοῖς προγιγνομένοις = ‘the line of conduct that they were pursuing previously, and had not ceased to pursue.’ (The aor. or perf. partic. is conjectured here as in i. 23 τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἡγοῦμαι μεγάλους γιγνομένους . . . ἀναγκάσαι ἐς τὸ πολεμεῖν, which alludes to the conduct of Athens during the same period—between the formation of the Confederacy to the beginning of the war—from a different point of view. In both places the pres. partic., describing something still in progress, seems better.)

26. οὐ γὰρ εἰκὸς ἦν . . . μὴ δρᾶσαι τοῦτο—to understand this sentence, it is necessary to realize that δρᾶσαι refers, not to the future, but to the past, as in c. 40, 5 ἐνθυμηθέντες ἃ εἰκὸς ἦν αὐτοῖς ποιῆσαι κρατήσαντας ὑμῶν. The sense is ‘it was not likely that they . . . would not have treated those who were left in this way, if only they had found any opportunity.’ We should have been ‘enslaved’ had circumstances been favourable to Athens: cf. i. 98 (ἐδουλώθησαν) καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὥς ἐκάστη ξυνέβη. (Dobree’s δυνηθεῖν makes the ref. to the future.)

ἀξιος, δίκαιος, ἱκανός.

6. καὶ πρὸς τὸ πλεόν . . ἀντισουμένου — 'I should prefer to insert ἀν before ἀντισουμένου, see Introd. p. xlii. The text means 'since in contrast, moreover, with the majority who were already yielding, we alone still tried to keep on an equal footing with them.' These words do not add much to what has been already said in ἐποχειρίους . . οὐλοῦντες, but, as Classen put it, refer to the conduct of the Lesbians as viewed by Athens. τὸ ἡμέτερον, not ἡμεῖς, is used for the sake of the verbal contrast with τὸ πλεόν. μόνον, if the text is sound, is (as Steup points out), not a proper antithesis to τὸ πλεόν, and it is an awkward anticipation of the next clause, ἄλλως . . ἐρημότεροι.

§ 2 l. 9. τὸ δὲ ἀντίπαλον δέος — 'it is reciprocity of apprehension alone,' as distinct from one-sided δέος. There is no objection to δέος, and no inconsistency with the opening words of c. 12. if the emphasis be put on ἀντίπαλον, as on προῦχων in the next sentence, and if μόνον be taken as qualifying ἀντίπαλον rather than πιστόν.

10. γάρ — 'for in that case.'

§ 3 l. 13. ὅσον — quatenus, 'so far as.' ἐς τὴν ἀρχήν, 'with a view to their empire.' (I see no reason whatever for rejecting these words, as Krüger and Steup do. They give the true object of the Athenian policy, and the mention of ἀρχή is appropriate enough in the presence of those who so strongly disliked it; cf. I. 75, with II. 8.)

14. γνώμης μᾶλλον ἐφόδω ἢ ἰσχύος — 'by means of policy and not of force.'

15. τὰ πράγματα . . καταληπτά — 'they might make themselves masters of the situation.'

18. ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ = ἅμα : so IV. 73.

τὰ κράτιστα — for τοὺς κρατίστους.

20. [τὰ] τελευταῖα — it is clear that τὰ κράτιστα is object of λιπόντες, and τελευταία is predicative; so that as there is no parallel for the article, it should be omitted.

τοῦ ἄλλου—neut. collective, and gen. abs.

§ 5 l. 23. αὐτῶν—in contrast with πρὸς ὃ τι χρὴ στήναι (aid from others): πρὸς ὃ τι χρὴ στήναι = ἡμᾶς τοὺς δυναμένους ἡγήσασθαι αὐτῶν (schol.). For the simple ἵστασθαι ‘rally’ with πρὸς cf. IV. 56 πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνων γνώμην ἕστασαν.

24. ἐχειρώσαντο—sc. τοὺς ξυμμάχους.

§ 6 l. 24. τό τε ναυτικόν—“a third reason is here given for the policy of the Athenians, of leaving the M. still independent,—namely, the apprehension of danger from driving them to unite their navy with that of the Peloponnesians” (Bloomfield).

26. καθ’ ἐν γενόμενον—standing alone this phrase would certainly mean ‘concentrating,’ ‘becoming united,’ as is proved by such passages as Xen. Hell. v. 2. 16 πῶς εἰκὸς ὑμᾶς τῆς μὲν Βοιωτίας ἐπιμεληθῆναι ὅπως μὴ καθ’ ἐν εἴη, πολλὸν δὲ μείζονος ἀθροισούσης δυνάμεως ἀμελῆσαι; This would give no point here, since the whole fleet is of course meant by τὸ ναυτικόν. The accepted meaning ‘uniting with others’ is only to be got through the addition, ἥ . . προσθέμενον, which must be regarded as an explanation. (Steup suggests that προσθέμενον should be removed, so that καθ’ ἐν γ. can be taken with the datives. I do not think it a likely note—in fact there is a scholium, ἐς ταῦτό ξυνελθόν, here—but I do think there is a difficulty, and possibly the first ἥ should be removed.)

§ 7 l. 27. τὰ δὲ καί—‘to some degree also’; a fourth and minor reason why the M. retained their independence. The schol. divides θεραπεία into flattery of the Athenian people and gifts to the leaders of the demos; no doubt these are included.

§ 8 l. 29. οὐ . . ἂν ἐδοκοῦμεν δυνηθῆναι = οὐκ ἂν ἐδυνήθημεν, ὡς ἐδόκει. δοκοῦμεν, read by Krüger (ἐτι δοκοῦμεν Steup) is simpler, but the imperf., referring to the time of the revolt, does not exclude the pres., and cf. c. 13 ἐνομιζόμεν ἀποστήσεσθαι.

32. τοῖς—‘what had happened.’

§ 1 l. 1. τίς κτλ.—‘what form of trustworthy friendship or freedom was this turning out to be?’ i.e. how could we put any confidence in a friendship or a freedom like that? (Dion. Hal. Antiq. vi. 78 τίς οὖν ἡ τοιαύτη φιλία καὶ πίστις, ἐν ᾗ παρὰ γνώμην ἀλλήλους θεραπεύειν ἀναγκασθόμεθα; seems to have found ἡ, not ἥ, after αὕτη in his ms., and our mss. have ἥ.)

3. παρὰ γνώμην—‘without sincerity,’ οὐκ ἀπὸ γνώμης ἀλλ’ ἀπὸ γλώσσης μόνον.

3. ὑπεδεχόμεθα—this word can be used of every kind of reception or welcome afforded to a ξένος, short of rejection: e.g. in Lysurgus § 133 οὐδεμία πόλις αὐτὸν εἶασε παρ' αὐτῇ μετοικεῖ: is repeated in the form τοῦτον δὲ τίς ἂν ὑποδέξαιτο πόλις;

6. ὃ τε . . πίστιν βεβαιοῖ, ἡμῖν τοῦτο . . ἐχυρὸν παρέιχε—passages sometimes cited as parallel to this (as II. 40 ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀμαθία μὲν θράσος, λογισμὸς δὲ ὄκνον φέρει and IV. 125 ὅπερ φιλεῖ μέγιστα στρατόπεδα ἀσαφῶς ἐκπλήγνυσθαι) bear little resemblance to it. If πίστιν, which Stahl bracketed, is sound, we should assume, with Krüger, a conflation of relative with expegetic clause—ὃ εὖνοια βεβαιοῖ with εὔ. πίστιν βεβαιοῖ. A schol. already takes this view; and unless the text is corrupt, no other explanation can be entertained. (The other scholium is a mere paraphrase, but its conclusion—διὰ τοῦτο ἄπιστος ἦν ἡ φιλία ἀμφοτέρων—shows that the writer discerned that in the whole passage, from τίς οὖν to παραβήσεσθαι ἐμελλον, the underlying idea, not clearly expressed, is that of a πίστις ἄπιστος. Both πιστή above and πίστιν here have been removed by critics more intent, perhaps, on the language than on the thought. ξύμμαχοι ὑπὸ δέους πιστοί are ξύμμαχοι ἄπιστοι.)

9. παράσχοι—representing ὁποτέρους ἂν παράσχη in past sequence.

10. ἀσφάλεια—‘sense of security.’

καί—‘as a consequence’ of the θάρσος.

§ 2 l. 12. διὰ . . μέλλησιν refers to δοκοῦμεν ἀδικεῖν: this might be a reason for objecting that they should have waited till some wrong was inflicted on them. τὰ δεινά=‘methods of coercion’: for the whole cf. I. 25 κατὰ τὴν Φαιάκων προνοίησιν τῆς Κερκύρας.

§ 3 l. 15. εἰ γὰρ δυνατόι κτλ.—with the text before us, which (except for ἀντιμελλῆσαι) follows the MSS., we must render, ‘had we been in a position both to intrigue like them and to delay like them (i.e. to put off our attack, but at the same time to have our plan of attack ready), what need was there for us to remain, nevertheless, at their mercy?’ The M. might of course defer the attack, but if they waited for the Athenians to attack they were lost. This is fairly satisfactory, the only difficulty being that ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου and ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου (‘just as we were,’ aequè atque fuimus) have no correspondence. It is in connexion with the next sentence that doubts arise. (1) ἐπιχειρεῖν clearly corresponds to ἀντεπιβοιλευσθαι, and προαυῖνασθαι to ἀντιμελλῆσαι (or ἀντεπιμελλῆσαι); (2) the statement ‘we need not have remained in their power’ is hardly equivalent to

'we need not have revolted because we should have retained our independence'; (3) ἐπ' ἐκείνοις εἶναι looks suspicious before ἐπ' ἐκείνοις ὄντας. A great many changes have been proposed, and those of Heilmann and Krüger indicated in the crit. note and adopted by Classen give a much better correspondence and an improved sense. Yet I do not feel that the objections to the MS. reading are decisive. The general sense is: we cannot be blamed for taking the first move merely because they delayed to take action against us.

§ 1 l. 1. τοιαύτας—the asyndeton when a demonstrative pron. sums up what precedes is common. αἰτίας is 'grievances' (Cornford), not synonymous with προφάσεις.

2. σαφείς τοῖς ἀκούουσι γνῶναι, as in κάλλιστον ἰδεῖν τοῖς φίλοις Xen. Oec. viii. 6; but an unusual kind of example. The words are appropriate to a pleader.

3. εἰκότως—'reasonably.'

5. βουλομένους—what is to be supplied?

10. ἀποστήσασθαι δ. ἀπόστασιν—the figura etymologica, as in vi. 56 τοὺς τὴν πομπὴν πέμψοντας, viii. 58 κοινῇ τὸν πόλεμον πολεμούντων. It is usually said that Thuc. plays upon the double meaning of ἀφίστασθαι here, (1) 'abstain from,' (2) 'revolt from.' With Porpo and Classen I cannot think this is so. The passage clearly corresponds to c. 10, 3 ξύμμαχοι ἐγενόμεθα οὐκ . . . Ἀθηναίους, ἀλλὰ . . . τοῖς Ἕλλησι, and the M. had 'revolted from' the Greeks who formed the Delian league just as much as they had 'revolted from' the Athenians. Nor is the view of the majority borne out by ἡ μέντοι ἀπόστασις κτλ.

11. ξὺν κακῶς ποιεῖν—referring to καταδουλώσις τῶν Ἑλλήνων c. 10. Cf. Xen. An. v. 5, 21 ἂν μὲν τις εὖ ποιῇ, ἂντ' εὖ ποιεῖν (ἀντενποιεῖν MSS.), ἂν δὲ κακῶς, ἀλέξασθαι (Stallbaum on Plato, Gorg. 520 E).

14. προποιῆσαι=προ-διαφθεῖραι.

§ 2 l. 16. χρή—sc. ὑμᾶς. ἥ καὶ μᾶλλον, i.e. in addition to the δίκαιον and ἀρετή (c. 10, 1) of doing so.

17. βοήθειαν ἀποστέλλειν—the M. really suggest two plans, both of which were adopted (c. 15, 1; 16, 3; cf. 25, 1), viz. (1) that a fleet shall be sent to Lesbos, and (2) that there shall be another invasion of Attica, though there had already been one this year. But the second proposal is put forward only as according with the interest of Sparta (either the enemy will not resist you, or—if they do—they must withdraw from the Peloponnese (cf. § 3) as well as from Lesbos, § 4). The second proposal only was at first carried out, but it did not have the desired effect (c. 16, 2). In the following year, accordingly, both schemes were to be carried out concurrently (c. 26), but even then the Pel. were slack about no. 1 (c. 27, 1). (I see no ground for thinking the text deficient here, as Steup supposes. The two courses are not proposed as alternatives, and, on the other hand, they are with good reason not announced as two parts of a scheme for helping Lesbos.)

19. καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ—this point is explained in what follows: so far it has not been touched upon. To this καιρὸς . . πρότερον refers.

§ 3 l. 21. ἐφθάρатаι—the old plur. terminations in -атаι, -ατο, are rarely found in Attic prose, as Xen. An. iv. 8, 5: Thuc. varies.

23. αἱ μὲν—see c. 7.

§ 4 l. 25. περιουσίαν νεῶν ἔχειν—a number large enough to protect the harbours and coast of Attica without recalling those that were out. This forecast was entirely falsified by the event; but it might very well be entertained because (1) in spite of the fall of Potidaea (in 429 B.C.), no Athenian fleet had been sent out to the Peloponnese in 429; (2) only thirty ships had been sent out this year in answer to the Spartan invasion of Attica, whereas in 431 and 430 the number had been 100; (3) late in 429 a Peloponnesian fleet had made an abortive attempt to seize the Piræus: reflexion on the result of this mismanaged affair may have led them, with good reason, to underrate the naval resources of Athens.

26. ἐπεσβάλητε—‘make an additional invasion’: τὸ δεύτερον emphasizes the ἐπ-.

§ 5 l. 30. ὃ γὰρ δοκεῖ . . παρέξει—‘if anyone is thinking that L. is far away, the advantage will be given to him close at hand’; that will come home to him.

32. ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ ἔσται—‘will turn on Attica, but (on the country) through which . . ,’ i.e. ἐν τῇ ξυμμαχικῇ; the issue depends on the action of the ξύμμαχοι. The need is to transfer the resources (cf. ὠφελίαν . . ὠφελεῖται) of the ξύμμαχοι from the Athenian to the Spartan side. Cf. Tac. Hist. ii. 28 sin victoriae columen in Italia vertetur.

§ 6 l. 38. οἱ πρὶν δουλεύοντες—i.e. those who were made ὑποτελεῖς before us.

§ 7 l. 38. βοηθησάντων—a remarkable ex. of the gen. abs. where the subject of the verb is the same; cf. c. 112, 6.

44. εἵχετε—'have up till now' is the meaning given by Porpo; but 'had' before the war is more natural, and more in accordance with the action of Sparta.

45. ἐλευθεροῦντες—a good point: at the outbreak of the war the Lac. had claimed to be 'the liberators of Greece.'

§ 1 l. 2. ἐς ὑμᾶς—'with regard to you . . '

3. ἴσα καί—adverbial, as ὁμοίως καί.

5. ἴδιον . . παραβαλλομένους—instead of the external accus. usual with παραβάλλομαι, i.e. τὰ σώματα, we have here the internal accus., κίνδυνον.

§ 1 l. 5. τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολήν—'as regards the suggested (c. 13, 4) invasion.' ἐσβολήν is the 'accusative of anticipation,' for which cf. l. 33, 3 τὸν δὲ πόλεμον . . εἴ τις ὑμῶν μὴ οἶται ἔσεσθαι. In both these instances the verb that follows (ποιησόμενοι, ἔσεσθαι) of course supplies a governing word to the accus. as in v. 36 τὸ Πάνακτον ἐδέοντο Βοιωτοὺς ὅπως παραδώσουσι, and in general. But sometimes the accus. has no strict regimen, but the constr. is changed in the dependent clause, as in the well-known case Aristoph. Av. 1269 δεινὸν γὰρ τὸν κήρυκα . . εἰ μηδέποτε νοστήσει πάλιν.

7. παροῦσι . . ἔφραζον. 'gave them orders while they were on the spot,' i.e. did not wait to send round after the delegates had left. κατὰ τάχος and τοῖς δύο μέρεσιν belong to ἵεναι: cf. ll. 10 ξυνῆσαν τὰ δύο μέρη . . ἐς τὸν Ἰσθμόν. The dat. is sociative, as constantly with words like στρατός and ναῦς. The subject of ἔφραζον and ἀφίκοντο is 'the Lacedaemonians' only. ἧθις=τὰ τρία μέρη; but ἧθις=τῶν ὀκτὼ τὰ τρία μέρη. ὥς ποιησόμενοι belongs to ἀφίκοντο as well as to ἔφραζον.

9. καὶ ('and then') ὀλκοὺς (cf. ἐφ-ολκίον, a boat towed, νεωλκεῖν, to beach a vessel with a ὀλκός. The instrument for pushing heavy weights was called ἑλιξ, but it was not invented till Archimedes) παρεσκευάζον—the ships which had been used against Phormio in the Corinthian gulf (at Lechaëum) were to be hauled over the Isthmus along the track, called δίολκος, to the Saronic gulf. The ships must have been put on some kind of truck. The exact nature of the ὀλκοί is unknown: possibly they were rollers fixed in the δίολκος. ὑπερφέρειν, διαφέρειν, διακομίζειν and διέλκειν are used of this.

15. ἐν καρποῦ ξυγκομιδῇ, like ἐν παρασκευῇ εἶναι: (ἐν) ἀρρωστίᾳ like ἐν ἀθυμίᾳ εἶναι.

§ 1 l. 2. διὰ κατάγνωσιν ἀσθενείας σφῶν=διὰ τὸ καταγῶναι 16

σφῶν ἀσθένειαν, i.e. σφῶν depends on κατάγνωσιν. On what the 'imputation' was based can be seen from c. 13.

6. τὸ ἐπὶ Λέσβῳ ναυτικόν—the suggestion of the speaker in c. 13 was ἀπ' αὐφοτέρων (Lesbos and Peloponnese) ἀποχωρήσονται: but what is mentioned in c. 7, 3 had meantime occurred.

8. αὐτοί—these, as the restriction shows, consisted of the ζευγῖται and θῆτες. The two higher classes served on board only in times of great danger.

10. παρὰ τὸν Ἴσθμόν ἐπίδειξιν ἐποιούντο, 'made a demonstration along the coast of.' With ἀναγαγόντες instead of the ordinary ἀναγαγόμενοι cf. Herod. vi. 12 ἀνάγων τὰς νέας.

11. ἀποβάσεις—the plan of making descents on the enemy's coasts as a counter-move to the invasion of Attica had been started by Pericles.

§ 2 l. 15. ἄπορα νομίζοντες — 'thinking (the situation) difficult,' a characteristic use of the neut. plur. without subst., as in I. 8 πλωιμώτερα ἐγένετο.

17. καὶ αἱ περὶ τὴν Π. τριάκοντα νῆς, 'the thirty ships that were about (off the W. coast) the Pel. as well.' If the text is sound, the thirty ships of c. 7 must surely be meant: it is true that c. 7, 3 shows that the majority of these ships, at any rate, were no longer ravaging the coasts; but the Lac. are misled by an inaccurate report. Chambry, however, suggests that the eighteen ships referred to in c. 7, 3 had subsequently rejoined the other twelve; if so, it is strange that Thuc. has omitted to mention this.—The edd. who delete τριάκοντα point out that from c. 13, 3 it is clear the Lac. knew already about the doings of this earlier fleet. But (1), the Lesbian speaker does not say that the fleet was actually ravaging the coasts; and (2) in any case, if c. 13, 3 is in point here, so is c. 13, 4, and there the expectation is that the fleet will be withdrawn. Why should not the Lac. have fresh information—inaccurate—that the expectation had been falsified? The second καί = 'also,' i.e. as well as the new fleet which was making ἀποβάσεις (§ 2). Those who omit τριάκοντα understand the fleet of 100 ships mentioned just before. This is of course possible, but the passage admits of a simple explanation as it stands; and it is hardly likely that the 100 ships could so soon be reported as ravaging the coasts.

18. τὴν περιουκίδα—land belonging to the περίοικοι in Messenia seems to be meant.

§ 3 l. 19. ὕστερον—it was not sent at once, c. 25.

20. ὅ τι πέμψουσιν—ὅστις because of the purpose.

21. ἐπήγγελλον—a technical word for sending out a formal notice, which may amount to a command. Cf. περιαγγέλλω.

22. ναύαρχον—an office held for a year. The admiral in war was almost as important as the kings, who commanded the land-forces. His power increased when the Spartan navy became greater.

§ 4 l. 25. εἶδον—sc. ἀναχωρήσαντας: cf. e.g. II. 11 δηοῦν μάλλον ἢ τὴν ἐαυτῶν δρᾶν, sc. δηουμένην.

I reluctantly agree with Steup that this ch. is spurious. 17
 Apart from peculiarities of language, it seems impossible to reconcile § 2 with the facts given in Bk. II. about the Athenian fleet ἀρχομένοι τοῦ πολέμου. (1) The 100 ships here said to be guarding Attica, Euboea and Salamis are not mentioned in Bk. II. They cannot be the 100 νῆες ἐξαίρετοι of which we read in II. 24. Those ships were docked, and were certainly not ἐνεργοί: (2) αἱ περὶ Ποτειδαίαν κτλ. makes the total 250 wrong, for we know that the number of ships at Potidaea alone was seventy, and, even if we conjecture that some of them had been withdrawn, there is yet another fleet of thirty sent περὶ τὴν Λοκρίδα καὶ Εὐβοίας ἅμα φυλακὴν (II. 26) to be counted in; (3) it is difficult to see why in § 4 the 1,600 men with whom Phormio ἀπετείχισε τὸ ἐκ τῆς Παλλήνης (I. 64) should be reckoned in counting the expenses of the siege of Potidaea, and the 4,300 whom Hagnon took there after Phormio's departure (II. 58) omitted in the computation: (4) the digression on the numbers of the first year of the war, when we look for a reasoned comparison between the numbers of 431 and 428 is very odd: (5) if 100 ships were guarding Attica, Euboea and Salamis, why should the fleet of thirty have been sent out to guard Euboea? As Busolt says, the author of this chapter has overlooked the fleet of thirty.

§ 1 l. 1. κατὰ τὸν χρόνον τοῦτον ὄν—i.e. καθ' ὄν, according to a common idiom; cf. Soph. OC. 748 ἐς τοσοῦτον αἰκίας πεσεῖν | ἔδοξ', ὅσον πέπτωκεν ἤδε.

2. ἐν τοῖς πλείστοις δῆ—for the fem. cf. c. 82, 1 (στάσις) ἐν τοῖς πρώτῃ ἐγένετο. Pre-eminence is not necessarily implied in any of the examples of this idiom, and Herbst is perhaps right in saying that prominence only is meant. The latter must be the point here, because of παραπλήσια δὲ καὶ ἔτι πλείους.

3. δῆ heightening the superlative is not elsewhere added to this idiom.

ἐνεργοὶ + κάλλει makes no sense. ἐνεργός, though not elsewhere applied to ships, is well suited to them, 'on active service,' 'in commission'; and it may be that the note in Hesychius αἱ μὴ ἀργαί alludes to this passage. But κάλλει must be corrupt, for the rendering 'effective by their fine condition' is not possible. Herbst's conjecture σ' καὶ λ', i.e. 230, is plausible; but in order to make up so great a total, he assumes a fleet of sixty ships for guarding the coast of Attica. Were this so, we should surely have heard of it at c. 16, 2 among the reasons that caused the Pel. to abandon the invasion; and even though we are left to collect the number of ships at sea in 428 B.C., this large item in the total must have been mentioned somewhere. Still, the interpolator may have reckoned the total at 230 by the same process, whatever it was, that led him to 250 for 431 B.C. below. The number, however, does not come in naturally after ἐν τοῖς πλείστοις. A very good sense would be got by μιᾷ πόλει (Widmann).

§ 2 l. 5. τὴν τε γὰρ Ἀττικὴν κτλ.—referring to the first year of the war; but there is no mention of such a fleet in the account of that year.

7. περὶ Πελοπόννησον—this fleet had been sent out by Pericles as a counter-stroke to the invasion of Attica.

8. χωρὶς δέ—'besides,' sc. ἦσαν, which is implied in the context.

§ 3 l. 11. τοῦτο—i.e. the sending out of these armaments. In a somewhat similarly vague way μετὰ Ποτειδαίας is used for μετὰ τῆς Ποτειδαίας πολιορκίας, with which should be compared II. 13 ἐς Ποτειδαίαν ἀπανηλώθη, 'money was spent on the siege of P.' It is strange that the expenses of the army at Potidaea, as distinct from the expenses of the fleet there, should be brought in so vaguely.

§ 4 l. 12. δίδραχμοι—half a drachma a day was the ordinary pay for a hoplite: here it is one drachma for the hoplite and one for his servant.

14. ἐλάμβανε—we should expect ἕκαστος ἐλάμβανον or ἐλάμβανεν. It is the omission of a singular subject to which the verb is attracted that is remarkable: cld. note that this omission is frequent in Herod.

15. ὧν οὐκ ἐλάσσους—when Potidaea revolted in 432 B.C., 3000 Athenian hoplites had been sent to besiege it. It seems that the permanent force was maintained at this number throughout the siege.

16. οἱ προαπήλθον—these 1600 had been sent to blockade

Potidaea from the south (I. 64) soon after the revolt. They were withdrawn from Chalcidice before the place fell.

17. τὸν αὐτὸν μισθόν—viz. one drachma per man, or double the ordinary wage (VI. 31).

19. τοσαῦται δὴ—referring still to the παραπλησίου καὶ ἔτι πλείους (§ 1); so that the digression extends to the end of the chapter.

3. Μήθυμναν—see c. 2, 1.

ὡς προδιδομένην—‘in the belief that it was going to be betrayed’; cf. Aristoph. Ραυ. 408 προδίδουσι τὴν Ἑλλάδα. MT. § 32.

5. ἐπίκουροι—for these mercenaries see c. 2, 2.

8. καταστησάμενοι . . βεβαιότερα—cf. I. 118 τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐγκρατεστέραν κατεστήσαντο.

§ 2 l. 13. πληγέντες—in an old poetical meaning, found several times in Thuc.

§ 3 l. 16. ταῦτα . . κρατοῦντας . . ἱκανοὺς ὄντας—the partic. phrase in apposition to ταῦτα, as in Soph. Antig. 17 οὐδὲν οἶδ’ ὑπέρτερον | οὔτ’ εὐτυχοῦσα μάλλον οὔτ’ ἀτωμένη, Philoc. 1355 πῶς ταῦτ’ ἐξανασχήσεσθε, τοῖσιν Ἀτρεὺς | ἐμὲ ξυνόντα παῖσιν;

19. εἶργειν—‘isolate.’

§ 4 l. 21. αὐτερέται—it was unusual in Thuc.’s day for fighting men to serve as rowers: in Homeric times it was usual; cf. Il. 11. 719 ἐρέται δ’ ἐν ἐκάστη πεντήκοντα | ἐμβέβασαν, τόξων εὖ εἰδότες ἱφί μάχεσθαι.

25. ἐγκατῳκοδόμηται—see crit. note. The verb means to build into a wall. Clearly the forts were built at the same time as the wall at the points strong by nature. If the perf. is right, we must take it as historic, like the presents, and render ‘there are forts built in at various points,’ so that the perf. points to the condition of the wall and forts when completed. But as no parallel to such a use of the perf. is known, the plup. should probably be read (I do not think ᾗ for οἷ necessary; but these forms are often confused in MSS.).

§ 1 l. 2. καὶ αὐτοί—bringing their own contribution into connexion with that levied from the allies.

3. τότε πρῶτον—probably meaning that the extraordinary war-tax was actually levied for the first time (cf. τότε πρῶτον in I. 96) in 428 B.C., though the arrangements for it existed before. Some think that Thuc. means for the first time in this war. There is no evidence that the tax had ever been levied before. (About the details of the εἰσφορά before the age of Demosth. little is known, but the burden fell mainly on the rich, being 'a progressive income-tax on property.' The amount was fixed by the Ecclesia. Gilbert, Inn. Gesch. 129 f. gives good reasons for supposing that Cleon took the initiative in promoting the vote before the Ecclesia. See also Neil on Aristoph. Eq. 771, 923.)

4. διακόσια τάλαντα—in apposition to εἰσφοράν.

5. ἀργυρολόγους ναῦς—to collect an εἰσφορά—not, in this case, arrears of tribute. The sending out of such ships is expressly attributed to Cleon in Eq. 1070.

6. (Λυσικλέα—this Lysicles does not belong to the family of Habronichus (I. 91), but is the προβατοπώλης of obscure origin whose connexion with Aspasia brought him into prominence; Aristoph. Eq. 132, 765, Plutarch, Per. 24.)

πεμπτὸν αὐτόν—meaning that Lysicles had the chief command. The large number of στρατηγοί sent is probably due to the difficulty and delicacy of the mission.

§ 2 l. 10. Αναυτῶν—cf. c. 32.

11. ἄλλης—'as well.'

20 § 1 l. 1. ἔτι γάρ κτλ.—about the middle of September in the previous year the Pel. had turned the siege of Plataea into a blockade. They had withdrawn the greater part of their army, leaving a garrison to guard half their lines, while the other half was guarded by the Boeotians.

3. τῷ τε σίτῳ ἐπιλείποντι—equivalent to τῇ σιτοδείᾳ. ἐπιλιπόντι all mss.; other accounts are not decisive in favour of the present.

5. τιμωρίας=βοηθείας, as often in Thuc. The Athenians had promised to help Plataea when the siege began, but their hands had since been full owing to the plague, the siege of Potidaea and the revolt of Lesbos. See further, Introd. p. xvi.

10. ἐσηγησαμένων—cf. VI. 99 οὐχ ἡκιστα Ἐμμοκράτους ἐσηγησαμένων.

11. ἀνδρὸς μάντεως—together.

13. ἔστρατήγει—the opinion of a general supported by a μάντις would carry great weight.

§ 2 l. 14. ἀπώκνησαν . . τὸν κίνδυνον—cf. c. 30, 4.

15. ἐς δὲ . . . μάλιστα—the phrase with prep. stands as subject of the verb. In Andoc. I. 37 εἰς τριακοσίους is presently repeated in the form μάλιστα τριακοσίους. For ἐς and μάλιστα often used together cf. e.g. c. 90, 3 περί and μάλιστα, Dem. XXI. 154, περί and ἴσως, Herod. III. 159 μάλιστα ἐς.

16. ἐνέμειναν—as in ἐμμένειν τοῖς ὅρκοις etc. τρόπῳ τοιῶδε is added κατὰ σύνεσιν.

§ 3 l. 18. ξυνεμετρήσαντο—it is possible to supply τὸ τεῖχος or τὰς κλίμακας, but § 4 strongly favours the latter.

20. ἐξαληλιμμένον—‘whitewashed.’ The ἐξ- probably denotes completion: the whitewashing had not been finished at one part of the wall.

ἡριθμοῦντο . . ἀριθμοῦντες—for the rapid passage from mid. to act. cf. II. 9 ναυτικὸν παρείχοντο . . πεζὸν παρείχον.

26. ἐς ὃ ἐβούλοντο τοῦ τεύχους—sc. καθορᾶν, or perhaps rather ὁρᾶν: τοῦ τεύχους agrees with καθορωμένον, and ἐς ὃ ἐβούλοντο = ‘as far as they wanted to see it,’ i.e. a sufficiently wide piece was visible. The objection to this is that ἐς ὃ for ὅσον or ἐς ὅσον does not occur elsewhere. In Herod. ἐς ὃ means ‘until’ with aorist or hist. pres. or iterative imperf.; but in Thuc. v. 66 ἐς ὃ ἐμμένηντο = so far as (of time), a use not found elsewhere; and it is possible by Gk. usage of a prep. and neuter adj. or pron., that the phrase should denote time or place: e.g. ἐξ ὀλίγου of time II. 11, of place II. 91, and so with ἐκ πολλοῦ. Two other views of this passage, not involving change of the text, must be noticed: (a), taking τοῦ τεύχους as agreeing with καθορωμένον ‘as the wall was completely visible to the desired point’ i.e. to the foot of the wall, viewed from above; but we should expect this meaning to be expressed directly and clearly. (b) Taking τοῦ τεύχους as depending on ἐς ὃ, ‘as they easily looked down upon the part of the wall that they wished to see,’ i.e. καθορωμένον (τούτου) ἐς ὃ τοῦ τεύχους ἐβούλοντο (ὁρᾶν). This is very awkward and we should expect καθορῶντες. The alterations proposed are (a) ὅσον for ἐς ὃ, Stahl, or (b) to insert an infin., as ἀναβῆναι after ἐβούλοντο (Stein).

§ 4 l. 26. τὴν ξυμμέτρῃσιν . . ἔλαβον—for the periphrasis with λαβεῖν cf. e.g. Soph. Phil. 1078 φρόνησιν λαβεῖν. Presumably the height arrived at by the majority was accepted as correct.

23. τῆς πλίνθου—collective; so in II. 9. 4 λίθοις καὶ κεράμω, cf. c. 74, 1, II. 76 κάλαμος. The meaning is that, having counted the layers, they found the height of the wall by multiplication.

21 § 1 l. 2. οἰκοδομήσει—Thuc. is partial to nouns in -σις: δόρυρσις, ξυμμέτρησις, κατάφειξις etc.

3. πρὸς—‘on the side towards,’ an idiomatic use common with localities, πρὸς τοῦ λιμένος, τοῦ ποταμοῦ and so on.

§ 2 l. 6. τὸ οὖν μεταξύ τοῦτο κτλ.—‘this intervening space was occupied with buildings assigned as quarters to the sentries.’ So Stahl, who views τὸ μεταξύ as subject, and οἰκήματα as internal accus., as in τὸ ἐναντίον ὄνομα μετωνόμασται I. 122. Steup agrees with this rendering, but he is inclined to retain οἱ ἐκκαίδεκα πόδες and he regards οἰκήματα as pred. nom. Another view, which is to be rejected, is that τὸ μεταξύ τοῦτο is adverbial accus., ‘in this space,’ and οἰκήματα subject of ἐκοδόμητο: the constr. is then very strained, and the perf. partic. διανενημμένα unnatural, implying that the quarters were distributed before they were built.

8. ἦν ξυνεχῆ—I agree with Steup in rendering ‘it was (all) continuous,’ without any definite subject, as in I. 8 πλωιώτερα ἐγένετο, and cf. II. 3 ἀμάξας . . ἐς τοὺς ὁδοὺς καθίστασαν, ἢ ἀντὶ τείχευς ἦ, for it was not only the guards’ quarters, but the two parallel walls as well that ‘looked like one thick wall.’

§ 3 l. 9. διὰ δέκα δὲ ἐπάλξεων—‘at an interval of ten,’ i.e. with the plur., ‘at intervals of ten,’ as in Isocr. IV. 46 αἱ πανηγύρεις διὰ πολλοῦ χρόνου συλλεγείσαι.

11. ἰσοπλατεῖς—cf. ἰσομηκής, ἰσοπαχής, ἰσοπληθής.

12. καὶ τὸ ἔξω—for καὶ ἐς τὸ ἔξω, cf. c. 44 περὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος μάλλον . . ἢ τοῦ παρόντος. The first καὶ, ‘and,’ is deleted by Herbst, but the predicative οἱ αἰτοί can come in the second clause.

13. παρὰ πύργον—Thuc. might have written παρὰ τοὺς πύργους, but the art. is omitted and the sing. used collectively as in II. 13 παρ’ ἐπαλξιν, for which we might have παρὰ τὰς ἐπάλξεις. This is better than ‘past a tower,’ because of δι’ αὐτῶν.)

22 § 1 l. 1. παρεσκεύαστο—impers., as often.

2. τηρήσαντες—cf. τηρεῖν ἄνεμον I. 65. τ. πορθμόν (‘passage’ VI. 2.

5. τάφρον—between the town and the τεῖχος. See Introd. p. xix.

6. προσέμειξαν—'reached.'

8. ἀνά occurs only twice in Thuc., here and iv. 72: with the temporal use here cf. Herod. viii. 123 ἀνά τὸν πόλεμον τοῦτον. "In the local sense especially, but also in the temporal, ἀνά frequently occurs in Homer and Herod. The constr. is common in Xenophon, but seems to occur in no other Attic prose writer" (C. F. Smith).

9. ψόφῳ depends on ἀντιπαταγοῦντος only, κατακουσάντων being absolute, like προῖδόντων. The gen. abs., in spite of the accus. (φύλακας), is common in Gk.

§ 2 l. 12. μή belongs to both partic. and verb.

13. αἰσθησιν παρέχοι—cf. II. 4 αἰσθησις ταχέϊα ἐπεγένετο.

14. τὸν ἀριστερόν μόνον πόδα—instead of both feet, as would normally have been the case. The plain statement of Thuc. therefore is that by leaving off the right sandal the men expected to get a firmer footing in the mud. (The schol. says ἰπεδέδεντο τὸν μὲν ἓνα τῶν ποδῶν δι' ἀσφάλειαν, τὸν δὲ ἕτερον γυμνὸν εἶχον διὰ κουφότητα, and many edd. follow this view; but this is certainly not what Thuc. says, and it is not a question of what we might think to be the effect of sandals or no sandals. Thuc. took it that the right foot was meant to get the firmer hold.)

§ 3 l. 16. προσέμισγον πρὸς τὰς ἐπάλξεις—I should prefer a comma at προσέμισγον, because πρὸς τὰς ἐπάλξεις does not go closely with the verb, but is added to make κατὰ μεταπύργιον clear. (As Steup says, the towers had no battlements, so that πρὸς τὰς ἐπάλξεις does not refer to the wall as a whole. But there is no need to alter the text with him.)

21. μετὰ δὲ αὐτὸν . . ἀνέβαινον—this still refers to the ψιλοὶ δώδεκα, and merely repeats the previous ἀνέβαινον with the addition of the intention of this party: on reaching the top they were to turn to left and right. The awkward repetition is due to the breaking of the thread of the previous sentence by the words καὶ πρῶτος ἀνέβη.

§ 4 l. 29. ἀντιλαμβάνόμενος is absolute.

30. δοῦπον—as the rarer word this may be right, but ψόφον is an early variant.

§ 5 l. 31. βοή—'an alarm.'

ἐπὶ τὸ τεῖχος—the garrison troops came out and made for their posts at the wall. See Introd. p. xviii.

32. ὅ τι ἦν—contrast v. 54 ἥδαι δὲ οὐδεὶς ὕποι στρατεύουσιν. Goodwin, M.T. § 674. 3.

33. καὶ ἅμα . . . προσέβαλον—this gives another reason why they did not know ὅ τι ἦν τὸ δεινόν: hence strictly we should have καὶ ὅτι οἱ κτλ.: cf. I. 110 τοῦτον δὲ διὰ μέγεθός τε τοῦ ἔλους οὐκ ἐδύναντο ἐλεῖν, καὶ ἅμα μαχιμώτατοί εἰσι τῶν Αἰγυπτίων οἱ ἔλειοι.

34. τῶν Πλαταιῶν—partitive gen., which Thuc., differing from other authors, often puts between an art. and partic., as I. 9 οἱ τὰ σαφέστατα Πελοποννησίων δεδωγμένοι, ib. 48 ταῖς ἀριστα τῶν νεῶν πλεούσαις, and below, c. 36, 5.

36. ἐκ τοῦμπαλιν ἤ—cf. τούναντίον ἤ, which generally shows a variant reading ἤ. In Xen. Anab. III. 5, 13 εἰς τοῦμπαλιν ἤ πρὸς Βαβυλῶνα is probably incorrect, but the text shows the idiom.

§ 6 l. 38. ἐθορυβοῦντο μὲν οὖν κτλ.—‘thus, remaining at their post (on the wall), they were in a state of excitement, yet not one dared to move from his own station, but they were at a loss to make out what was happening.’ εἰαυτῶν goes back to the subject of ἐθορυβοῦντο. εἰαυτῶν here is to be preferred to αὐτῶν: but in c. 91, 2 τοὺς Μηλίουσιν οὐκ ἐθέλοντας εἰς τὸ αὐτῶν συμμαχικὸν ἰέναι ἐβούλοντο προσαγαγέσθαι, the pers. pron. may be right, since ipsorum, not suum may be meant.

§ 7 l. 43. ἐχώρουν ἔξω τοῦ τείχους—i.e. they descended from the wall on the outer side, supposing that the alarm meant that some force was approaching from Athens. In the darkness and excitement these 300 had not communicated with the men in the towers who had raised the alarm.

44. φρυκτοὶ πολέμιοι—λαμπάδες πολεμίουσιν δηλοῦσαι schol.

§ 8 l. 47. ὅπως ἀσαφῆ . . . ἥ καὶ μὴ βοηθοῖεν—the time-honoured example of interchange of subj. and opt. after a past tense. Cf. vi. 96 ἐξέκριναν ὅπως εἶσαν φύλακες καὶ . . . παραγίγνωνται, where no difference of meaning can be detected. See M.T. § 321. Analogous is the interchange of moods in c. 113, 2.

23 § 1 l. 1. οἱ δ' ὑπερβαίνοντες—all who were attempting to escape, whatever they were doing, are regarded as one body; but presently they are divided into οἱ μὲν, those already on the wall, and οἱ δέ, those who were still below. The result is a very ugly sentence.

4. ἐκατέρου—see c. 22, 3.

5. τὰς τε διόδους—Steup, following Poppo, renders ‘and,’ making the parenthesis extend from ὥς to ἐπιβοηθεῖν, because, if τε is regarded as correlative to καί, the sense of τάς τε διόδους . . . ἐπιβοηθεῖν is absurdly repeated in κάτωθεν (i.e. ἀπὸ τῶν διόδων) εἶργον. It will be noticed that, if ἐφύλασσαν μηδένα δι' αὐτῶν ἐπιβοηθεῖν were absent, the sentence would be perfectly regular in outline: οἱ δ' ὑπερβαίνοντες τάς τε διόδους ἐνστάντες καὶ κλίμακας προσθέντες, οἱ μὲν καὶ κάτωθεν (i.e. ἀπὸ τῶν διόδων) καὶ ἄνωθεν (i.e. ἀπ' ἄκρων τῶν πύργων) εἶργον κτλ. I think that this is a sign, not that the interrupting words are spurious—they are quite in Thuc.'s manner—but that Thuc. wrote them without working out the sentence to its end, as if after πλείους he had intended to continue, not with οἱ μὲν, but in the form ἀπὸ τῶν πύργων τοὺς ἐπιβοηθοῦντας ἄνωθεν εἶργον βάλλοντες: on reaching πλείους, he shifted his plan and as the general subject was to be kept up, bifurcated the sentence with οἱ μὲν . . . οἱ δέ, instead of making a separate sentence of the οἱ δέ clause. This view of the matter is confirmed by the ugly repetition of κλίμακας προσθέντες and πλείους in different senses.

6. δι' αὐτῶν—coming from the other πύργοι through the passages to the μεταπύργιον over which the P. were escaping.

9. πλείους—as in c. 22, 4 init.

οἱ μὲν includes those in the δίοδοι and those on the top of the πύργοι.

10. κάτωθεν καὶ ἄνωθεν—with εἶργον.

11. οἱ δ'—those who were at the foot of the wall.

§ 2 l. 14. αἰεί—as Krüger says, this belongs to the partic. and the verb alike.

15. τῆς τάφρου—for this outer trench see c. 24, 2.

17. παρὰ τὸ τεῖχος—‘by the wall,’ on the outside.

κωλυτὴς γίγνεται—a favourite periphrasis with Thuc., especially with nouns in -της; examples occur in cc. 2, 40, 58, 59; with διδάσκαλος c. 42; with ἡγεμών c. 105.

§ 3 l. 18. πάντες—meaning οἱ πλείους of § 1.

19. οἱ τελευταῖοι—best taken by itself, between commas, i.e. ‘as they were the last,’ like οἱ δ' . . . οἱ πλείους above. But Steup makes οἱ τελευταῖοι partitive apposition to οἱ . . . πύργων and joins χαλεπῶς οἱ τελευταῖοι κ. The men on the towers waited till the rest were safely across.

§ 4 l. 25. τὰ γυμνά—the unprotected side.

29. βιαίως—like βιαιότερον ἀναγαγόμενοι II. 33, ‘hard pressed.’

§ 5 l. 31. οἶος ἀπηλιώτου—sc. ὄντος, as in Soph. OC. 83 ὡς

ἐμοῦ μόνῃς πέλας, sc. οὔσης. It is very rarely that the partic. is omitted in gen. abs. where the noun does not itself suggest a partic. as in Soph. OT. 965 ὧν ὑφηγητῶν, sc. ὄντων: but the omission is softened in this case by the analogy of the gen. of time, as in νυκτός.

ἢ βορέου—perhaps a marginal note, intended to fill up the sense of μάλλον. (It has been suggested (1) that βορέου should be changed to εἶρον, or (2) that μάλλον should be transposed before ἢ.) But possibly two propositions are compressed into one; and the full sense is ‘as it is when the wind is east: it is, in fact, more watery then than when the wind is north.’ (So Chambry, Rév. de phil. ’97.)

32. ὑπονειφομένη—cf. Herod. II. 13 ἔεται ἡ χώρα, Xen. Hell. II. 4, 13 νειφόμενοι ἀπῆλθον: for ὑ. is properly ‘being thinly besnowed.’

31. ἐγένετο . . ἡ διάφενξις—cf. VII. 41 τὴν κατάφειξιν ἐποιοῦντο ‘were seeking refuge.’ The idea of success is contained in δια-. (I cannot agree with Classen that ἐγένετο here means ‘proved successful’: that sense is confined in Attic to old phrases like ἐγένετο τὰ ιερά, cf. ἐ. τὰ διαβατήρια v. 55. In VI. 74 and VIII. 57 γίγνεσθαι=merely ‘take place.’ καὶ ἡ διάφενξις=‘the means of successful escape too (as well as the difficult crossing)’ was mainly owed to (i.e. more than to any other cause: meaning that it was a narrow thing).

35. διὰ τοῦ χειμῶνος τὸ μ.—the order as in Herod.; cf. e.g. I. 32 μετὰ τῆς ξυμμαχίας τῆς αἰτήσεως.

24 § 1 l. 4. τὸ τοῦ Ἀνδροκράτους ἡρώον—shrine of a Plataean ‘hero,’ a well-known landmark on the road, evidently in Plataean territory and not far from the Asopus. Intro. p. xix.

5. ἥκιστ’ <ἄν>—after such words as μάλιστα the accidental omission of ἄν is so frequent in some mss. where the error is obvious that it seems unlikely that νομίζω σε ποιῆσαι can = ‘I think you may do it.’ Cf. Xen. Oec. 11, 14 ἡνίκα for ἡνίκ’ ἄν, 18, 1 πότερα for πότερ’ ἄν, Mem. IV. 3, 8 μάλιστα for μάλιστ’ ἄν, in which instances the verb, being in opt., betrays the error. In our passage if ἥκιστα is read, we should render ‘thinking that the enemy had not formed a suspicion.’

σφῆας—subject of τραπέσθαι.

8. πρὸς Κιθαιρῶνα καὶ Δρυὸς κεφαλῆς i.e. making for the pass of the Oak’s Heads from which they would descend to Attica. For the roads see Intro. p. xix.

§ 2 l. 12. τὴν πρὸς τὸ ὄρος—they turned SE. and crossed Cithaeron at a point E. of the road taken by the enemy. It is not meant that they actually touched—

´σιὰς τ' ´ερνθράς θ' αἰ Κιθαιρῶνος λέπας νέρθεν κατωκῆκασιν.

(Eur. Bacchae, 751.)

16. πλειόνων—c. 20, 2.

§ 3 l. 19. κατὰ χώραν ἐγένοντο—‘went to their station.’ κατὰ χώραν usually with μένειν (certain sole minnet); with ἔαν Demosth. xxvii. 60. For γενέσθαι κατὰ cf. καθ’ ἐν γ. ‘to concentrate’; τὴν χάλαζαν εὐχόμενοι μὴ καθ’ ἑαυτοὺς γ. Demosth. ix. 33.

24. ἐσπένδοντο—σπονδὰς ἐζήτον ποιῆσθαι schol. With the internal accus. ἀναίρεσιν cf. c. 109 ἀναχώρησιν ἐσπέισαντο ἅπασιν.

§ 1 l. 4. πλεύσας ἐς Πύρραν καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς πεζῇ—two stages 25 in the scheme by which διαλαθὼν ἐσέρχεται; and so πεζῇ ‘by land’ is co-ordinated with πλεύσας, and is equivalent to πεζῇ ἐλθὼν.

6. ἡ ὑπερβατὸν ἦν—old. do not agree whether this means (1) that the ‘torrent-bed’ interrupted the Athenian wall, or (2) that the wall, though unbroken, was lower at this point. ὑπερβατὸν hardly admits of (1). A third suggestion (3) is that ὑποβατὸν should be read, meaning that Salaethus crawled under the wall through an outlet. As for (2), if we compare c. 18, 4-6, it seems strange that the A. should have been so simple as to leave the wall low at the χαράδρα: but Thuc. has omitted some detail that would have made things clear—as he is apt to do. See Intro. p. xv.

8. προέδροις—τοῖς ἄρχουσι schol. For the νῆες see c. 16.

10. προαποπεμφθῆναί τε—cf. l. 87 εἶπον ὅτι . . δοκοῖεν . . βούλεσθαι δὲ . .

11. τούτων ἕνεκα . . ἐπιμελησόμενος cf. l. 80 εὐπειρία . . νομίσαντα.

§ 2 l. 13. πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους—from passages like v. 44 πρὸς τοὺς Ἀ. μᾶλλον εἶχον τὴν γνώμην it is clear that ὥστε ξημεβαίνειν does not govern these words, but is an epexegetis.

§ 1 l. 3. δύο καὶ can hardly be right, as the number is 26
repeatedly given as 40, e.g. cc. 25 and 29, and the suggestion that the two Lesbian triremes (cc. 4 and 5) are here included is not probable. Rather than suppose that a commentator wrongly added in the two Peloponnesian ships mentioned in cc. 5, 4 and 25, 1. I prefer to think we have a confusion as the outcome of mistaking μ’ (40) for β’ (2).

4. ἄρχοντα . . προστάξαντες is a phrase in Thuc. for appointment to a special command, and even the order is exactly as in VII. 19: so ἄρχοντα for ἔχοντα is a certain correction. ναύαρχος means that he held the annual office of high admiral.

7. ἀμφοτέρωθεν—through the dispatch of the ships and the invasion.

8. ταῖς ναυσὶν . . καταπλεούσαις—the transl. ‘send out a fleet against the ships sailing to M.’ is impossible, because (1) the partic. cannot be attributive unless ναυσὶν is placed after Μυτιλήνην, and (2) ἐπιβοηθεῖν + dat. = ‘hasten to help.’ Hence either we must alter the text—Steup brackets καταπλεούσαις—or, better, render ‘when they were sailing.’ So Stahl refers ταῖς ν. καταπλεούσαις to the Athenians and renders ‘sail with their ships to M. and come to help,’ as if we had καταπλέοντες.

§ 2 l. 10. Cleomenes and Pleistoanax were sons of the famous Pausanias. In 445 B.C., when Euboea and Megara revolted from Athens, Pleistoanax had invaded Attica, but had retreated when Pericles returned from Euboea: he was exiled for this, and his young son Pausanias reigned in his stead.

11. νεωτέρου, ‘too young.’ The δέ after πατρός is not justified by the constr., since no description of Cleomenes has preceded; hence Krüger suggests that ἐπίτροπος has fallen out after ἔτι. There may, however, be a slight anacoluthon.

§ 3 l. 13. [καί]—εἴ τι ἔ. is clearly added as an explanation to τὰ . . τετμημένα.

16. μετὰ τὴν δευτέραν—i.e. that of 430 B.C., see last n. on c. 1. The present invasion is the fourth.

§ 4 l. 17. ἐπιμένοντες—equivalent to προσδοκῶντες, hence fut. infin.: the aor. inf. in c. 2 expresses result, not expectation; cf. Soph. Trach. 1176 μὴ ἐπιμείναι τοῦμόν ὀξύναι στόμα.

19. ἐπεξήλθον with τέμνοντες, ‘pressed forward with,’ not ‘over-ran.’

27 § 2 l. 7. ὀπλίζει—to make hoplites of them, the defensive armour, shield and breastplate, had to be distributed.

§ 3 l. 10. κατὰ ξυλλόγους γ.—these meetings were, of course, informal.

28 § 1 l. 1. οἱ ἐν τοῖς π.—οἱ τὰ τῆς πόλεως πράττοντες.

2. ἀποκωλύειν—the mss. give fut., but the infin. after δύναιμι and its equivalents is prolate.

6. Ἀθηναίοις μὲν—the conditions are stated in the loose form frequently found in treaties, etc.: (1) two points in favour of the A. are connected; (2) some supply ἐξεῖναι to ἀποστελλειν, but it is better to make the latter depend directly on ὥστε; (3) δῆσαι, etc. also depend on ὥστε.

11. ἐν ὅσῳ = μέχρι οὗ, cf. c. 52, 3. It is a similar constr. to that in Tityre, dum redeo. Classen saw a combination of (1) ἐν ὅσῳ ἂν ἀπῶσι and (2) ἕως ἂν πάλιν ἔλθωσι.

§ 2 l. 17. ὅμως—in spite of the guarantee; cf. c. 49, 1 n. (Vollgraff brackets as a dittography from βωμούς.) καθίζειν ἐπὶ βωμῶν, ἀναστήσας (= ἀναστήναι πείσας), and κατατίθεσθαι ἐς are technical in this connexion. With ἀναστήσας ὥστε μὴ ἀδικῆσαι cf. ἀναστήσαντες ἐφ' ᾧ μηδὲν κακὸν ποιήσουσιν I. 126.

19. μέχρι οὗ without ἂν, as in Herod. (μέχρι οὗ is not used in verse). M.T. § 620.

§ 3 l. 21. προσεκτήσατο—the common object, as usual, accommodated to the partic., πέμψας.

§ 1 l. 4. ἐνδιέτριψαν—Steup thinks that we should read 29 ἐνδιατρίψαντες or remove, mainly because τοὺς μὲν . . ἐάλωκεν gives the result of the slowness in both parts of the voyage; more prob. Thuc. would have written ἐκομίσθησαν below, but altered the form of the sentence at that point to add the result of κομισθέντες in λαυθάνουσι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους—for the ships could not have been detected by the Athenians ἐκ τῆς πόλεως so long as they were on the Peloponnesian coast (there was no Athenian fleet out there now).

6. τοὺς μὲν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως Ἀ.—those remaining at home in contrast with those at Lesbos. (The attempt to fix upon any definite fleet seems to be a mistake. Ships in port may, of course, be meant.)

7. πρὶν δὴ τῇ Δήλῳ ἔσχον—though no actual neg. precedes, the whole effect is neg.; cf. c. 104. and M.T. § 635. With the dat. constr., which is poetical, for ἐς or κατά, cf. c. 5 αὐτοῖς . . ἀφικνέεται, (which is nearer to the dat. of interest), and c. 33, 4. After leaving Delos they had no fear of A. ships.

8. Ἰκάρῳ καὶ Μυκόνῳ—the goal ultimately reached is mentioned first, as not uncommonly.

§ 2 l. 11. ἡμέραι δὲ . . ἐάλωκεία—lit. 'M. now reckoned seven days'; cf. I. 13, 4. Herod. II. 145 Ἡρακλεῖ ὅσα φασὶ εἶναι ἔτεα ἐς Ἀμασιν, Xen. H.H. II. 1. 27 ἡμέρα ἦν πέμπτη ἐπιπλέονσι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις. The insertion of μάλιστα even with small numbers is a mannerism of Thuc.

14. ἐκ τῶν παρόντων—'under the circumstances.'

30 § 1 l. 4. ὥσπερ ἔχομεν—‘as we are,’ without change of plan, here implying ‘at once,’ but not always so: the meaning implied depends on the context.

§ 2 l. 5. ἀνδρῶν depends on τὸ ἀφύλακτον, equivalent to τῶν: the gen. with neut. adj. or partic. as noun is a common constr. with Thuc.

7. καὶ πάνυ—‘most certainly,’ ‘undoubtedly,’ as in II. 11 καὶ πάνυ ἐλπίζειν: here in contrast with εἰκὸς δέ . .

8. καὶ ἡμῶν ἡ ἀλκή τ. μάλιστα οὔσα—the version ‘where our strength chiefly lies’ is open to the objections (1) that the fleet was not stronger than the Athenian fleet at Lesbos; that could not for a moment be maintained after Phormio’s exploits; and (2) that the strength of the Pel. fleet, being unknown to A., could be no reason why there should be πολὺ τὸ ἀφύλακτον on the part of the enemy. Another rendering is ‘where defence happens to be in the main our rôle,’ but I cannot find that ἀλκή is ever used for ‘the defensive’ in opposition to ‘attack’; it means, on the contrary, ‘defence or resistance’ in opposition to ‘flight or submission’—something positive, not negative. In spite of the objections, the first rendering is prob. right; the reasoning that Thuc. puts into the mouth of speakers is not always exact: the strength of the Pel. is not intended to be compared with that of the A., and should have been referred to in an independent sentence, but the love of antithesis has led to the connexion of ἐκεῖνοί τε . . καὶ ἡμῶν. τυχάνει οὔσα marks the circumstance as unusual, and the real comparison is between the military and naval strength of Alcidas.

11. ὥς—‘conscious that.’

§ 4 l. 16. Reading τὸ καινὸν τοῦ πολέμου, lit. ‘the strangeness of war is just this sort of thing’: i.e. the carelessness of the victor with the corollary of a sudden and wholly unexpected attack. In φιλάσσοιτο and ἐνορῶν only the carelessness of the victor is kept in view, but that the corollary is included in τὸ τοιοῦτον is proved (1) by the vague inclusive pron. in place of τοῦτο, (2) by τὸ καινόν, which could not mean τὸ ἀφύλακτον merely, but must include τὸ ἀπροσδόκητον. (Steup conjectures τὸ κοινόν, ‘where war shows itself notoriously impartial’: this makes the sentence easier to understand, but I do not think καινόν impossible. Many edd. see in τὸ καινόν a reference only to sudden attack—τὸ προσπεσεῖν ἄφνω: I do not understand how καὶ τοῖς πολεμίοις ἐνορῶν can be explained on this view. τὸ κενόν, ‘the vanity,’ is as tolerable as τὸ καινόν in itself, but is more likely to be a mistake for τὸ καινόν than vice versa.)

17. δ —governed by φυλάσσοιτο and ἐνορῶν, or perhaps—in strictness—αὐτό is supplied from it to ἐνορῶν, for the position of τε does not make this impossible.

§ 11. 3. οἱ Λέσβιοι—for these see cc. 4, 4, 5, 4.

8. ἐλπίδα δ' εἶναι—sc. ἀποστήσai.

ἀκουσίως—i.e. 'no one was unwilling to see them come,' the adverb applying to οὐδενί, not to the subject of ἀφίχθαι: cf. Soph. Antig. 70 ἐμοῦ γ' ἂν ἡδέως (sc. ἐμοί) ὀρώης μέτα.

9. καὶ τὴν πρόσδοον . . ὑφέλωσι—parallel to ἀποστήσωσιν, '(that) they might gradually draw away this which was the main source of A. revenue.' Not 'one of the chief sources'; and the position of ταύτην renders a second τήν unnecessary. The φόρος from the Carian and Ionian cities is meant; they had been grouped together and treated as one since 436 B.C., and the lists in CIA. vol. i. show that this combined φόρος was the largest item in the Athenian πρόσδοι. (ἦν before ὑφέλωσι can scarcely be right: the loss of the φόρος would be the necessary outcome of the revolt of Ionia, and could hardly be stated as an independent condition of what follows, however that be understood.)

10. καὶ ἅμα . . . δαπάνη γίγνηται—'and at the same time, in case the Athenians should blockade them (in the Ionian port), the Athenians might be put to expense.' (A majority of mss. gives ἦν ἐφορμῶσιν αὐτοῖς—or αὐτοῖς—δαπάνη σφίσι γίγνηται, i.e. 'if the Peloponnesians should blockade the Athenians, they (the Pel.) might have a fund to draw on, viz. the φόρος.' The objections to this are, as I think, (a) ἦν ἐφορμῶσιν αὐτοῖς is too vague: surely the Lesbians and Ionians cannot be thinking here of a blockade of the Attic coast—c. 15, 1—and an undertaking of such magnitude—see c. 16, 1—could not possibly be suggested in this casual way—and the alternative explanation, that the proposal is that Alcidas shall 'maintain a squadron of observation in Ionian waters,' with a victorious Athenian fleet of equal numbers at Mytilene—cf. especially c. 33. 1—is out of the question. (b) It is true that δαπάνη can mean 'money for spending,' where the context makes the drift clear, but it is hardly possible that δαπάνη τινι γίγνεται can mean anything but δαπανᾶται ὑπό τινος, according to the idiom; and there is force in Krüger's remark that the previous sentence here decidedly suggests the idea of 'loss.')

12. Πισσούθην—-Ionia and Caria were included in his satrapy. As Persia claimed and did not receive tribute from the Greek cities, it was by no means unlikely that the satrap might be induced to aid the enemies of Athens.

§ 2 l. 13. τὸ πλείστον τῆς γνώμης εἶχε—‘strongly inclined to,’ ‘regarded it as decidedly best,’ like the Herodotean πλείστος γνώμην εἰμί.

14. Μυτιλήνης ὑστερήκει—‘too late for’ means here ‘too late to help,’ as in Xen. Agex. 2, 1 ὥς ὑστερήσειε τῆς πατρίδος.

32 § 1 l. 1. παρέπλει—down the coast of Ionia.

§ 2 l. 5. ἐς τὴν Ἔφεσον—though part of the Athenian empire, E. could not hinder the fleet from entering the harbour.

6. Σαμίων—the Samian exiled oligarchs living on the coast opposite Samos; cf. c. 19.

7. οὐ καλῶς τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐλευθεροῦν—that she was the Liberator of Greece was the claim of Sparta in the war, her ἀξίωσις τῆς ἀρετῆς (I. 69). The most striking comment on this claim comes in Xen. Hell. III. 5, 13, in the speech of a Theban at Athens thirty years after this time: οἷς ἡμῶν ἀπέστησαν φανεροί εἰσιν ἐξηπατηκότες· ἀντὶ γὰρ ἐλευθερίας διπλὴν αὐτοῖς δουλείαν παρεσχέκασιν.

8. εἰ διέφθειρεν—(1) εἰ in the sense of ὅτι or ἐπεὶ, (2) for διέφθειρεν, where we expect διαφθείρει, see M. T. § 691.

χείρας ἀνταιρομένους—so Herod. VII. 209, Xen. Cyr. v. 4, 26 ἐάν τις ὅπλα ἀνταίρηται σοι.

§ 3 l. 15. ὁρῶντες γάρ—showing how it came that Alcidas had so many prisoners. The connexion is a little loose.

18. μὴ . . παραβαλεῖν—the inf. appears to be fut.; the μὴ is produced by the preceding neg. and might have been omitted; the constr. is unusual. παραβάλλω intrans., as with δια-, ἐσ-, etc.

33 § 1 l. 3. ὤφθη—pluperf. in sense; he must have touched at Clarus while sailing from Embaton to Ephesus.

4. Σαλαμινίας καὶ Παράλου—for the two state triremes see a dict. of antiquities.

§ 2 l. 10. τῆς Ἐρυθραίας—see c. 29.

13. καὶ ὥς—although, by the defenceless condition of Ionia, it was easy to stay. ἅμα with reference to παραπλέοντες.

15. αὐτάγγελοι δέ—it is better, with Classen, to regard ἀτειχίστου . . πόλεις as a parenthesis, and this sentence as a direct continuation from καὶ πανταχόθεν.

§ 3 l. 19. οὐκέτι ἐν καταλήψει ἐφαίνετο—sc. ὁ Ἀλκίδας, 'was clearly no longer to be caught'; cf. vi. 60 ὥς οὐκ ἐν παύλῃ ἐφαίνετο (τὸ πρᾶγμα). I do not venture to disturb this traditional explanation; but I think it possible that Paches is the subject of ἐφαίνετο, and that ἐν κ. ἐ. means 'was clearly likely to catch him'; cf. c. 15 ἐν καρπού ξυγκομιδῇ ᾗσαν.)

21. μετεώροις—sc. ταῖς Ἀλκίδου νανσίν.

οὐδαμοῦ ἐγκαταληφθεῖσαι . . παρασχεῖν—'they were not caught anywhere and (so) compelled to entrench themselves and to cause the Athenians the trouble of guarding and blockading them.' For παρέχειν with words denoting trouble cf. vii. 70 ἐκπληξίν τε καὶ ἀποστέρησιν τῆς ἀκοῆς παρέχειν, and πράγματα π.

§ 1 l. 1. πάλιν—'back,' see ἐπανεχώρει, 'turned back,' above. 34

2. κατόκητο—cf. i. 120 ἐν πόρῳ κατωκημένους. Thuc. uses the mid. forms only in the perf. and pluperf.; so Herod. Notium was the port of Colophon. Aristotle tells us that Colophon and Notium were not well suited to form a single state: hence στάσις. It was an exaggerated case, he says, of Athens and the Piræus; and the Piræus is more democratic than the city. Now Colophon had been under an oligarchy of the rich; and at the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, this oligarchy, it appears, wanted to get the city out of the hands of Athens, and invited in the 'barbarians,' favouring, apparently, reunion with Persia. The majority migrated to Notium, but a fresh στάσις broke out, and one party got help from the satrap Pissuthnes and was joined by the oligarchs from Colophon. The expelled democrats now sought aid from Paches. (We do not know who Itamanes was.)

5. κατὰ στάσιν ἰδίαν ἰδίαν cannot mean 'intestine,' and ἰδίᾳ, 'by one of the parties,' is very probable; cf. c. 2. It is possible, however, that ἰδίαν means 'confined to Colophon,' not extending to Notium.

6. μάλιστα—'about.' The date is 430 B.C.

§ 2 l. 9. οἱ μὲν . . οἱ δέ—partitive apposition.

10. ἐπικούρους Ἀρκάδων—i.e. Arcadian μισθοφόροι. They served as mercenaries already in the Persian wars, and are familiar as such in the expedition of the Ten Thousand. The mercenaries must have been in the service of Pissuthnes.

11. ἐν διατειχίσματι—a place divided by a wall from the rest of the town. διατειχίζειν is 'to separate by a wall.' With the force from Pissuthnes came also the pro-Persian party from Colophon, which was now part of the citizen body of Notium.

14. ὑπεξελθόντες τούτους—for the accus. Krüger quotes Eurip. frag. Alcmene ὅμως ἀγῶνα τόνδε δεῖ μ' ὑπεκδραμεῖν.

§ 3 l. 16. τῶν: the ms. τὸν is a form of mistake that is frequent in similar passages in mss. of Xenophon.

19. ὁ μὲν after προκαλεσάμενος involves an anacoluthon, like that of Il. vi. 509 ὁ δ' ἀγλαΐῃφι πεποιθὼς | ῥίμφα ἐ γούνα φέρει: but it is not usual in Homer. Here we have a sing. nom. followed by two contrasted subjects. For the opposite form, a plur. nom. followed by only one subject, cf. Il. iii. 211 ἄμφω δ' ἔζομένω γεραρώτερος ἦεν Ὀδυσσεύς.

22. προσδεχομένων—the subst. to be supplied, as in i. 3 ἐπαγομένων αὐτοῖς, ii. 52 ἐναποθνησκόντων (sc. ἀνθρώπων). Cf. c. 55, 1.

§ 4 l. 28. οἰκιστάς—the 'oecists' or 'founders' settled the government and started the new colony, as was usual. Cf. vi. 5 οἰκιστὴς γενόμενος κατέκτισε Καμάρινα.

35 § 1 l. 2. As regards Pyrrha and Eresus see c. 18. For Salaethus see c. 25. For the Mytilenaeans in Tenedos, c. 28.

§ 2 l. 9. τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς—the dat. of accompaniment, frequent with words like στρατός and ναῦς.

36 § 1 l. 3. παρεχόμενον—'propose,' 'put forward.'

§ 2 l. 7. γνώμας ἐποιοῦντο—'offered various opinions' or 'made proposals,' in the Assembly, of course.

10. ἐπικαλοῦντες—anacoluthon, as though a personal constr. had preceded. Cf. ii. 53 θεῶν φόβος οὐδεὶς ἀπείργε, το μὲν κρίνοντες, vi. 24 ἔρως ἐνέπεσε . . εὐελπίδες ὄντες. Eur. Hec. 971 αἰδῶς μ' ἔχει . . τυγχάνουσα.

11. τὴν τε ἄλλην . . καὶ προσξυνελάβοντο—(1) they reproached them with revolting under specially grave circumstances, οὐκ ἀρχόμενοι; (2) their rage was largely due to the appearance of a Pel. fleet on the Ionian coast. As the sentence stands it is illogical, since τὴν τε ἄλλην should be followed by something like καὶ ὅτι τὰς ναῦς ἐπηγάγοντο. (As to Classen's insertion of καὶ after ἀπόστασιν—on which there has been some subtle argument—we may regard it as possible, but scarcely necessary.) For the change from partic. to finite verb cf. v. 61 βολόμενοι ἄλλως τε . . καὶ ὄμηροι ἦσαν. It is frequent in Herod.

13. προσξυνελάβοντο—for this reading cf. iv. 47 ξυνελάβοντο τοῦ τοιούτου οὐχ ἥκιστα οἱ στρατηγοὶ κατάδηλοι ὄντες. The emphasis is, of course, on the partic. (τολήμασαι), as often. οὐκ ἐλάχιστον is adverbial. The other reading, προσξυνεβάλετο,

'contributed,' τὸ ἐ. (sc. μέρος) τῆς ὁρμῆς being object,—cf. Ath. Pol. 19 συνεβάλλετο οὐκ ἐλάττω μοῖραν τῆς ὁρμῆς—is defended by IV. 25 αἴτιον δὲ ἦν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι προειπόντες and VIII. 9 αἴτιον δὲ ἐγένετο . . οἱ πολλοὶ οὐκ εἰδότες, but the present instance goes further.

15. οὐ γὰρ ἀπὸ βραχείας διανοίας—'it was no small design, they thought, that had led them to revolt,' viz. the design of bringing about a revolt of Ionia with the aid of the Pel. fleet.

§ 3 l. 18. ἄγγελον—pred. to τριήρη.

§ 4 l. 20. μετάνοιά τις—τις is often added thus to words expressing feelings that rise half involuntarily, as with ῥώμη, ὄκνος, κατήφεια ('dejection'), φειδῶ ('reluctance').

21. ὦμόν . . αἰτίους—in the tragic style, and unusually rhythmical for Thuc. (πέφευγε τὸ εἶδος, says Hermogenes): the sentence breaks into two corresponding halves after πόλιν, μέγα being elided and ἡ οὐ, of course, counting as one long.

22. μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ—ἢ implies a negative, and any sentence implying a neg. is apt to be strengthened by an expressed neg. (M.T. § 815): cf. II. 62 οὐδ' εἰκὸς χαλεπῶς φέρειν μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ . . ὀλιγωρῆσαι.

§ 5 l. 24. πρέσβεις—c. 28.

25. τῶν Ἀθηναίων—the order as in c. 22, 5.

παρεσκεύασαν—'got them to.' οἱ ἐν τέλει are the 'government,' i.e., presumably, the Strategi, who, in time of war, could have a special meeting of the Ecclesia summoned.

26. αἰθῆς γνώμας προθεῖναι—'allow a fresh debate': to re-open a matter that had been settled in a recent meeting of the Ecclesia seems to have rendered the person responsible to impeachment; but the Ecclesia, as the sovereign power, could by a majority of course do anything, provided that the Prytanies and the president of the meeting consented to submit a proposal for discussion. (The evidence on the point is doubtful; but the account here given reconciles the various passages that bear on it.)

28. ἐνδηλον ἦν—the personal constr., esp. common with δῆλος.

29. τινας—'persons': after τοὺς ἐν τέλει we should expect αὐτοὺς; but the speakers, rather than the officials, are referred to. A special Assembly (σίγκλητος ἐκκλησία) was summoned for the purpose. G. Gilbert, B. zur innern Geschichte Athens, 142, assigns the debates on Mytilene to the end of the official year

428-7. It is probable that Cleon was in that year Strategus, having replaced Lysicles the προβατοπώλης, who had been killed in Caria in the winter. Busolt, however, places the debates in the first prytany of the following year, 427-6, when Cleon and those like him were replaced in the strategia by Nicias and Laches, men strongly opposed to Cleon. In either case, it is obvious that party-feeling must have run very high just at this time.

§ 6 l. 32. τὴν προτέραν—sc. γνώμην, 'proposal,' from γνώμαι above: νικᾶν is 'to carry,' as in νικᾷ ἕτερον ψήφισμα Φιλοκράτης, Aeschin. III. 63. (I do not think that the sense of γνώμη shifts here from 'views' to 'decree,' and that consequently τῇ προτέρᾳ 'on the previous day' should be read.)

33. βιαιότατος—this is the first time that Thuc. mentions Cleon, though he had been rising for some time. The views of him expressed by ancient authors, whether as politician or as orator, are almost uniformly unfavourable. As regards Thuc.'s opinion of him, and the following speech, see Introd. p. xxxvii.

37 § 1 l. 2. δημοκρατίαν—object of ἔγνω, but in sense subj. of ἄρχειν. ἀδύνατον. 'incapable of,' the neut. as in Homer's οἷα ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίῃ.

3. ἐν—of the cause.

§ 2 l. 6. ἀδεῖς καὶ ἀνεπιβούλευτον give the same thing from two sides: you neither fear your neighbour nor cause him to fear you.

ὁ τι ἂν . . ἀμάρτητε ἢ . . ἐνδῶτε—we know too little of the working of the Athenian empire to specify acts of clemency on the part of Athens. From what we do know we should say that Athens was severe enough; but we must remember that the standard of the times was very different from ours: any right that Athens did not take from her allies she regarded as a privilege granted to them. οἴκτω is parallel to λόγῳ πεισθέντες; supply αὐτοῖς to ἐνδῶτε.

9. ἐπικινδύνως . . ἐς ὑμᾶς the emphasis is on this: hence the dislocation of the order. Tr. 'you think that such weakness does not . . bring danger to you.'

10. οὐκ ἐς τὴν . . χάριν—'without gaining the gratitude'; they take a concession as a sign of weakness.

11. τυραννίδα ἔχετε τὴν ἀρχήν—repeating words attributed to Pericles at II. 63.

12. καὶ πρὸς . . ἀρχομένους—parallel to τυραννίδα, the constr. with πρὸς (after ἀρχή) like φιλία or πόλεμος πρὸς.

13. οἷ—very weakly supported by MS. evidence. There is a similar case at IV. 10, where the MSS. give τὸ δισέμβατον ἡμέτερον νομίζω· μενόντων μὲν ἡμῶν ξύμμαχον γίγνεται, but Dionysius quotes the passage with ὁ μενόντων etc. Without the rel., we must assume an epexegetis of ἀκοντας ἀρχομένους with asyndeton.

14. ἐξ ὧν . . περιγένησθε—for ἐξ ἐκείνων ᾧ, internal accus. to π., 'as a consequence of the superiority you have established over them by strength (hinting at the successive reductions to the status of tributary subjects) and not by their willing obedience.' εὐνοια, as Arist. Eth. IX. 5, 3 says, δι' ἀρετὴν καὶ ἐπιείκειάν τινα γίνεται, ὅταν τῷ φανῇ καλὸς τις ἢ ἀνδρείος.

§ 3 l. 18. ὧν ἂν δόξῃ περί—for περὶ ἐκείνων ᾧ ἂν δόξῃ, 'as regards measures that we have passed.' Thus the neut. nom. ᾧ is here attracted as in VII. 67 βλάπτεσθαι ἀφ' ὧν ἡμῖν παρεσκεύασται. In (ᾧ) ἂν δόξῃ the allusion is to ψηφίσματα passed in the Ecclesia.

χείροσι νόμοις . . ἀκύροις—it has been thought that there is an allusion here to definite νόμοι that forbade a psephism to be reconsidered, perhaps within some fixed period (cf. n. on c. 36, 5); but the reference seems more general. (The objection that Cleon would, if there were such an allusion, definitely threaten a γραφὴ παρανόμων has not much force, for (1) Thuc. does not deal in the technicalities of Attic legal procedure, which were not of sufficiently 'universal' interest for him, with his view of history; and (2) in VI. 14 sqq., where Nicias alludes to some rules about the re-discussion of a psephism, Alcibiades, in his rejoinder, makes no capital out of the rules at all—does not even allude to the point.) Arnold thought that the psephism under revision is itself meant under νόμοι, and that the confusion is meant to be intentional on Cleon's part. It is best, I think, to consider the passage intentionally vague and rhetorical: revision of psephisms leads easily to revision of laws in a democracy. This general application is borne out by ἀμαθία τε κτλ., which would be an odd addition to a clause containing a precise reference.

19. κρείσσων ἐστίν—the personal constr.: 'it is better for a state to have.' (This explanation is strongly supported by ὠφελιμώτερον (sc. πόλει) and ἄμεινον οἰκοῦσι τὰς πόλεις. Classen says 'is stronger'; but the point is what is good for a state, not what a state can do.)

20. ἀμαθία μετὰ σωφροσύνης—'ignorance when combined with self-restraint,' no doubt a hit at the πεπαιδευμένοι, and the sentiment so outrageous to an educated Athenian, that we must assume that it was really uttered by Cleon in substance. For the evil results of ἀμαθία note the following passage (Euripides, frag.):

γνώμῃς γὰρ ἀνδρὸς εὖ μὲν οἰκοῦνται πόλεις εὖ δ' οἶκος, εἰς τ' αὖ πόλεμον ἰσχύει μέγα· σοφὸν γὰρ ἐν βούλευμα τὰς πολλὰς χέρας νικᾷ, σὺν ὄχλῳ δ' ἀμαθία πλεῖστον κακόν.

σωφροσύνη and ἀκολασία are often contrasted in the language of popular philosophy: εἰρήσετε τὴν μὲν ἀκολασίαν . . . τῶν κακῶν αἰτίαν γυνομένην, τὴν δὲ σωφροσύνην τῶν ἀγαθῶν. Isocr. de pace § 119. In οἱ τε φανώτεροι κτλ. we meet a sentiment that is frequent in Euripides.

23. πρὸς—‘as compared with.’

§ 4 l. 25. τῶν τε νόμων σοφώτεροι—hence they despise the laws: a reference back to μηδὲ γνωσόμεθα etc.

26. τῶν τε αἰεὶ . . . περιγίγνεσθαι—the τε . . . τε puts the contempt for laws and the opposition to all counsel on the same footing as joint parts of their conduct. περιγίγνεσθαι, ‘to get the better’ of it, by opposing it.

27. ὥς ἐν ἄλλοις μέζουσιν . . . γνώμην—‘as though they could not find any greater subject on which to display their talent’: the subject in debate is just the one. they think, on which they are qualified to give an opinion. (Cf. VII. 64 οὐκ ἂν ἐν ἄλλῳ μᾶλλον καιρῷ ἀποδειξάμενος.)

31. ἀδυνατώτεροι δὲ . . . λόγον—in form exactly parallel to the preceding clause: but τοῦ καλῶς εἰπόντος is certainly possessive gen. to λόγον, together with which it refers to τῶν αἰεὶ λεγομένων ἐς τὸ κοινόν above. Το ἀδυνατώτεροι supply ἢ οἱ ξυνετώτεροι.

33. ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου—‘fair,’ free from personal bias, cf. c. 42; more often ‘on equal terms.’ For ἀγωνιστής as a ‘rhetorical prize-fighter,’ Bloomfield cites several exx.

34. ὀρθοῦνται—‘have a prosperous course’: cf. particularly II. 60 πόλιν ὀρθουμένην (σφάλλομένην. Here ὀρθοῦνται τὰ πλείω corresponds to πολλὰ σφάλλουσι τὰς πόλεις above. There is an exactly similar passage in Soph. Antig. 673 f. (The rendering ‘judge rightly’ is certainly wrong.)

§ 5 l. 34. ὥς—for οὕτως, usually only with καί, οὐδέ, μηδέ, in prose.

36. παρὰ δόξαν—‘contrary to our opinion,’ not, as in the other cases in Thuc., ‘unexpectedly.’ The conjecture παρὰ τὸ δόξαν, 'contrary to what has been decided,' is plausible; but I agree with Bloomfield that this is not really in point here: it is not borne out by τῶν αἰεὶ λεγομένων . . . περιγίγνεσθαι and τοῦ καλῶς εἰπόντος μέμψασθαι λόγον.)

§ 1 l. 1. ἐγὼ μὲν ὁ αὐτός εἰμι τῇ γνώμῃ—similar words are attributed to Pericles, II. 61. 38

6. ἀμβλυτέρα—'with anger more dulled,' when there is delay.

ἀμύνεσθαι—for (τὸ) ἀμύνεσθαι as in Aesch. Ajg. 191 παρ' ἄκοντος ἤλθε σωφρονεῖν, and elsewhere in Thuc. The addition of κείμενον (and perhaps ὄν) makes the omission ugly and unusual. Cf. the schol. εἰ τὸ ἀμύνεσθαι τῷ παθεῖν ἐγγὺς τεθείη.

8. ἀντίπαλον ὄν . . . ἀναλαμβάνει—'is most adequate when it recovers satisfaction': the main emphasis on the partic., as often. If ὄν is omitted, ἀντίπαλον agrees with τιμωρίαν—cf. ἀμβλυτέρα τῇ ὀργῇ above—and both form and sense are improved. (Hude reads τοῦ παθεῖν, takes κείμενον as accus. abs., 'when it is proposed to take vengeance,' and makes ὁ παθὼν subj. of ἀναλαμβάνει, omitting ὄν with Haase. But what is the point of saying κείμενον ἀμύνεσθαι where the sense calls for ἀμυνόμενος?) Some think ἀναλαμβάνει should be λαμβάνει or ἂν λαμβάνοι, as in δίκην, τιμωρίαν, λαμβάνειν.

9. θαυμάζω δέ κτλ.—there might be reason in opposing the vote, if it were shown that either (1) the revolt is advantageous to Athens; or (2) though troublesome to us, it is indirectly a gain because it does harm to the allies and renders them less an object of fear to us.

§ 2 l. 14. τὸ πᾶν δοκοῦν—'the universal opinion of men': he must try to prove a paradox. (According to another view, the allusion is to the psephism. But 1) τὸ πᾶν δοκοῦν, 'what is generally agreed upon,' would hardly be a true description of the vote; and 2) τὸ δόξαν would certainly be natural.)

15. κέρδει—a suggestion of bribery: the charge was a common one against public men, and was often true. The contrast in ἢ . . . ἢ is between an opponent who wants to show his skill in oratory and one who is bribed to mislead. ἐκπονήσας is co-ordinate with πιστεύσας, and ἐπαιρόμενος gives the motive that prompts him ἐκπονεῖν.

16. τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τοῦ λόγου—'what is plausible in the words.' The whole of this section is a hit at the bad side of the new rhetoric: it is riquant, because Cleon himself indulges in rhetoric freely: this elaborate comparison to an ἀγών of rival rhetoricians is itself full of it.

§ 4 l. 21. θεαταὶ μὲν . . ἔργων — ‘spectators of words and hearers of deeds’ is an artificial way of saying: you are content to take the facts from what the orators say, and look on at the debates, thus inverting the natural order of things at an ἀγών, in which one would watch the athletes’ deeds and listen to the literary men’s words: so badly do you, who are at once the directors and the people attending, manage the ἀγῶνες. (The explanations usually given of this passage do not seem to me to give an intelligible meaning to the whole: (a) κακῶς ἀγωνοθετεῖν does not mean ‘to be wrong in instituting a contest,’ but ‘to do so in the wrong way’; cf. the second and third failings—ἀπατᾶσθαι ἄριστοι and ζητοῦντες ἄλλο τε κτλ.: all indicative of a topsy-turvy mind and (b) only with the latter meaning—which is a natural one—does οὔτινες κτλ. give an intelligible reason.)

23. ὥς δυνατὰ γίγνεσθαι—‘as practicable’: sc. ὄντα, cf. VI. 40 τοὺς λόγους ὥς ἔργα δυναμένους κρινεῖ.

24. τὰ δὲ π. ἤδη—sc. σκοποῦντες.

οὐ τὸ . . ἀκουσθέν, ‘not taking what has been done as more trustworthy through having seen it, than what you have heard (about it).’ (It has been objected to ὄψει that we need ἀκροάσει or ἀκοῇ to contrast with it; but the whole clause corresponds to ὥς δυνατὰ γίγνεσθαι, and = ὥς τὸ ἀκουσθέν πιστότερον ὢν ἢ τὸ ὁφθέν: τὸ ἀκουσθέν itself contains the contrast to ὄψει: instead of saying τὸ ὁφθέν, Thuc. says τὸ δρασθέν in order to introduce again the contrast between ἔργα and λόγους—δρασθέν and ἀκουσθέν.)

25. ἐπιτιμησάντων—the readiness of speakers to criticize adversely the action of public men, if opponents, is often insisted on; but it is odd that Cleon, who was ever ready to censure, should talk so.

§ 5 l. 27. μετὰ καινότητος—equivalent to a dat. of cause, as I. 32 μὴ μετὰ κακίας, δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἀμαρτία: cf. e. 42, 1.

ἀπατᾶσθαι ἄριστοι—sc. ὄντες, co-ordinate with κακῶς ἀγωνοθετοῦντες, the second way in which you are αἵτιοι: εὐπάργωγος εἶ, θωπευόμενός τε χαίρεις κάξαπατῶμενος, Aristoph. Eq. 1115.

28. μετὰ δεδοκιμασμένου—sc. λόγου, ‘when an approved argument is stated’: ξυνέπεσθαι means ‘go with the speaker.’ (Another way is to take ξυνέπεσθαι μετὰ closely together, ‘to follow the lead of’: I prefer the former.)

29. δοῦλοι ὄντες κτλ.—the whole down to ἀποβησόμενα is epegegetic of ἀριστοι (ὄντες).

§ 6 l. 30. καὶ μάλιστα μέν—co-ordinate with δοῦλοι ὄντες, βουλόμενοι would have made the sentence more symmetrical, but cf. already Iliad ix. 656 οἱ δὲ ἕκαστος ἐλὼν . . ἴσαν.

32. ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι τοῖς τοιαῦτα λέγουσι—i.e. τοῖς τοιούτοις ῥήτορσι, who applaud that one of their number who happens to be speaking; 'vying with speakers who use such arguments,' viz. ἄτοπα. (It is objected to τοιαῦτα that it cannot be referred to τὰ ἄτοπα only, after what has preceded. But it is to be noted that ὑπερόπται δὲ τῶν εἰωθότων is merely parenthetical: had there been a μέν after δοῦλοι, the objection would have been serious.)

33. τῇ γνώμῃ—not to lag behind the rest 'in insight.' To understand 'plan' or 'purpose' of the speaker (γνώμη governed by ἀκολουθῆσαι) is not so good, because it is the external form, not the meaning, that rivets their attention.

34. ὀξέως with λέγοντος, because λέγοντός τι cannot here mean 'says something important or sensible.' On the other hand, ὀξέως, when taken with λέγοντος, is rendered 'shrewdly,' 'cleverly'; but (1) ὀξύ, adj., would be natural, and (2) it seems that λέγειν ὀξέως means not 'speak shrewdly' but 'speak rapidly'; it is only with words denoting mind that βραδύς, ὀξύς mean 'slow,' 'quick' of wit. I should prefer to render 'when any one is speaking rapidly.'

προεπαίνεσαι—sc. δοκεῖν, generally understood 'to approve' it before it is uttered, but perhaps 'to be first with their approval.'

35. πρόθυμοι εἶναι—this may depend on ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι or, more probably, on δοκεῖν, but, in either case, (εἶναι) βραδεῖς does not give very good sense, and can hardly be excused on the ground that the main emphasis falls on πρόθυμοι εἶναι; for—to mention only one objection—προαισθέσθαι and προνοῆσαι are plainly meant to be equal in importance. We require εἰωθότες to make sound sense. The best solution proposed is to consider καὶ before προαισθέσθαι and εἶναι as spurious: the whole would then be closely connected with προεπαίνεσαι.

§ 7 l. 37. ζητοῦντές τε κτλ.—again going back to αἵτιοι ὧς ὑμεῖς, 'seeking something different—one might almost say—from the world in which we live;' dreamers.

39. ἀπλῶς τε—a resumption of the substance of the whole sentence.

10. σοφιστῶν θεαταῖς καθήμενοις—'men sitting as spectators at a display of sophists,' as shown in the Protagoras, for example.

39 § 1 l. 1. ὦν—neut. θεαταῖς is pred.: but as the comparison is between θεαταί and βουλευόμενοι, καθήμενοις is possibly, as Lincke says, interpolated.)

3. μίαν πόλιν—cf. c. 113, 6.

§ 2 l. 4. οὔτινες—the dat. antecedent omitted. Distinguish between οὔτινες μή and οὔτινες οὐ below.

7. νῆσον . . μετὰ τειχῶν—thus secure against enemies. The contrast to the previous sentence is stated in inverse order: subjection—compulsion; security—freedom. This is a common arrangement of clauses in Thuc.

9. ἐν ᾧ—of their condition. καὶ αὐτοί—independently of our help.

13. ἐπανάστησαν μᾶλλον ἢ ἀπέστησαν—an armed rising contrasted with a secession; but the application of the contrast to the circumstances of Lesbos is not exact, since ἐπανάστασις implies a dominant power, which Athens ex hypothesi was not.

14. μὲν γε—'secession anyhow,' whatever be the truth about ἐπανάστασις. For the suppression of the δέ-clause after this combination cf. Aristoph. Arch. 154 τοῦτο μὲν γ' ἤδη σαφές. (Append. i., Neil, Aristoph. Equites).

15. βίαιόν τι πασχόντων—this is far-fetched; and the implied contrast about ἐπανάστασις would too obviously not hold: hence the statement of it is suppressed.

17. καίτοι—'surely.'

καθ' αὐτούς—'by themselves,' not μετὰ τῶν πολεμιστῶν στάντες.

18. κτώμενοι—probably conative.

§ 3 l. 19. παράδειγμα δὲ αὐτοῖς—as παράδειγμα means example, both as a warning and as an encouragement, it might have been applied to both clauses with οὔτε; but the second has taken an independent form, cf. c. 96, 3.

τῶν πέλας—'of others.'

22. τὰ δεινά—often of the dangers of war.

23. τὸ μέλλον—'the future')(παρόνσα.

24. μακρότερα . . βουλήσεως—'having come to hope for what was beyond their strength, but less than their ambition.' Clearly what they hoped for was the destruction of Athenian power—ἐξήτησαν ἡμᾶς διαφθεῖραι. But how was this 'less than they wanted'? what more could they want? Probably we have here a sample of Cleon's exaggeration and abuse, and no definite meaning is to be looked for. It is enough for his purpose that the Lesbians had wanted to revolt sooner than they did (c. 2). (Herbst's explanation, Zu Thuk. p. 82, that μακρότερα means the power of Mytilene, and ἐλάσσω that of Athens, seems far-fetched, and his rendering of τῆς βουλῆσεως is scarcely intelligible.)

26. ἐν ᾧ—'the moment that.'

γάρ—justifying the charge that they put might before right. They had suffered no wrong, and they chose a time when Athens was in difficulties.

§ 4 l. 28. αἷς ἂν . . ἔλθῃ—the clause forms the object to τρέπειν. μάλιστα καὶ δι' ἐλαχίστου, 'most fully and most suddenly,' refers to the moment just alluded to in ἐν ᾧ ἐβήθησαν: it was καιρὸς ὥς οὕτω πρότερον, c. 13, 3. The revolt was not really the unpremeditated thing that Cleon represents it to have been. The ἀπροσδόκητος εὐπραξία refers to the difficulties in which Athens was. (The objection to δι' ἐλαχίστου that the change of fortune on the part of the Mytilenaeans was not sudden, but was gradually brought about by the events of the war, rests on a confusion of facts and the rhetorical presentment of them.)

30. τὰ δὲ πολλὰ . . εὐτυχοῦντα ἀσφαλέστερα—'in most things prosperity according to calculation is safer than prosperity that is a surprise.' It is an extraordinary explanation that makes τὰ πολλὰ, after the schol., adverbial accus., and κατὰ λ. εὐτυχοῦντα equivalent to τὰ . . εὐτιχοῦντα. The constr. intended is clearly ἀσφαλέστερά (ἵστι) τὰ πολλὰ εὐτυχοῦντα=εἰ εὐτιχεῖ: cf. II. 13 (ἔφη τὰ πολλὰ κρατεῖσθαι. And there is no doubt about the reading being right: εὐτιχία, a stable condition, is in contrast with εὐπραξία, a single event (cf. I. 33): a calm life unmarred by misfortune constituted εὐτιχία (cf. II. 44). Of course παρὰ δόξαν (εὐτυχοῦντα) gives a different and paradoxical meaning to εὐτιχία. This doctrine of Cleon seems to be based upon the philosophy of life professed by his opponent Nicias. Cf. v. 16, of Nicias, διασώσασθαι τὴν εὐτυχίαν.

33. ὥς εἰπεῖν ῥᾶον—'almost more easily.'

§ 5 l. 34. χρῆν δέ—they would never have gone so far in their indulgence in ὕβρις had we long ago kept a tighter hand on them.

35. μηδὲν διαφερόντως τῶν ἄλλων—the adverb (EM) is better than διαφέροντας, and has, at any rate, as much MS. support as χρῆν just before, and it has, in addition, the support of the text of the schol. and of Dio Cassius.

37. καὶ ἄλλως—‘in other cases as well,’ making the application general.

§ 6 l. 40. τοῖς μὲν ὀλίγοις . . τὸν δὲ δῆμον—the oligarchical government had caused the revolt.

43. οἷς γ' ἐξῆν—as this sentence refers especially to the δῆμος, it would be better, perhaps, to put πάντες . . ἐπέθεντο in a parenthesis—unless, with Stahl, we understand πάντες (οἱ τοῦ δήμου) and ὁμοίως (τοῖς ὀλίγοις).

44. πάλιν ἐν τῇ πόλει εἶναι—‘reinstated in their rights.’ For the sense of πόλις cf. IV. 106 πόλεώς τε . . στερισκόμενοι.

46. βεβαιότερον—sc. τοῦ μεθ' ἡμῶν κινδύνου.

§ 7 l. 46. τῶν τε ξυμμάχων σκέψασθε . . τίνα οἴεσθε ὄντινα οὐ—(1) the old explanation of this passage given by Göller, for instance) was that τίνα οἴεσθε ὄντινα οὐ was equivalent to ἕκαστον. c. 46. 2, where τίνα οἴεσθε ἦντινα οὐ is independent, is strongly against this. Classen said that οἴεσθε merely repeats σκέψασθε owing to the length of the sentence: and this is accepted by subsequent edd. Classen's view involves also an anacoluthon, since σκέψασθε would be followed by τίς ὅστις οὐ with impl., not by τίνα ὄντινα οὐ. Against this view is to be urged (a) the complication of the constr. introduced by σκέψασθε, (b) the gen. τῶν τε ξυμμάχων, which, as Classen says, depends not only on τοῖς . . ἀποστᾶσι, but also on τίνα οἴεσθε ὄντινα οὐ, so that Thuc. had a clear view of the constr. from the start. It is not unlikely that σκέψασθε is meant to be parenthetical. (2) τίς ὅστις οὐ is treated as a single word.

52. παθεῖν—a second subject to ᾗ.

§ 8 l. 53. ἀποκεκινδυνεύσεται—‘we shall find exposed to utmost peril.’

55. τῆς ἔπειτα προσόδου, δι' ἣν ἰσχύομεν—the relative clause applies to τῆς προσόδου only, the revenue generally, not to τῆς ἔπειτα π., the future revenue: hence ἐκεῖθεν or ἐπετείου has been conjectured for ἔπειτα, which the schol. already had in the text. Neither conjecture wholly removes the difficulty:

and so δι' ἣν ἰσχύομεν is thought by some to have been brought in here from the very similar passage in c. 46, 3. It would be better to read ἰσχύσσομεν, 'through which we may support our power.' τὸ λοιπόν is pleonastic after ἐπειτα, and perhaps belongs to δι' ἣν ἰσχύομεν.

56. στερήσεσθε—'will have to go without.'

§ 1 l. 2. προθεῖναι—of the orators.

πιστήν—'hope relying on (the speaker's) eloquence,' is contrasted with 'hope gained by bribery (of the speaker),' cf. c. 38, 2; one speaker's eloquence, another's venality, may prompt him to take up the cause of Lesbos.

3. ξυγγνώμην ἀμαρτεῖν ἀνθρωπίνως λήψονται—'that they will be excused for having erred humanly,' i.e. through human frailty not deliberately: πῶς ἂν τό γ' ἄκον πρᾶγμ' ἂν εἰκότως ψέγοις; Soph. OC. 977.

4. ἄκοντες—the οὐ applies to this also, but is attracted to the verb.

5. ξύγγνωμον = ξυγγνώμης ἄξιον, as also, perhaps, in iv. 98, but not elsewhere.

§ 2 l. 7. τότε—supply διεμαχεσάμην (the same idiom in i. 86 and vi. 60.). But μὴ λύειν τὰ π., which came into question only in the second meeting, causes some difficulty. We must assume either (1) that the sentence is developed as it proceeds, μὴ λύειν τὰ π. not being supplied with τότε, or else, (2) that πρῶτον (διεμαχεσάμην) means that Cleon had already in the previous meeting seen that there would be an agitation for revision. (I prefer the second solution. Brevity would excuse προεδογμένα as applied to a vote to be passed. The voting at the first meeting must have been close; and c. 36. 3 suggests anxiety about getting it carried out. Krüger had noticed that τότε πρῶτον is unsatisfactory according to the usual explanation: I think there must be a point in πρῶτον, as in Aristoph. Eq. 339 πρῶτα διαμαχοῦμαι.)

10. ἐπιεικεία—'generosity,' 'consideration for others.'

§ 3 l. 11. τοὺς ὁμοίους—variously rendered as 'like minded,' or 'situated as we are,' i.e. equals, not subjects. For the latter, it is claimed that ἐξ ἀνάγκης points to unwilling subjects; and sentiment so arrogant might well be attributed to Cleon.

15. ἔξουσιν . . ἀγῶνα—sarcastic, implying 'if they must have their ἀγῶν'; cf. c. 38, 4.

καὶ μὴ—there is implied prohibition, hence μὴ. The choice of the constr. is no doubt influenced by the previous καὶ μή.

17. τὸ παθεῖν εἶ—the excellent return they will get is a bribe from the Mytilenaeans. It appears that a few years later Cleon himself was said to have made something out of the troubles of Mytilene.

19. καὶ τὸ λοιπόν—‘in the future as in the past.’

20. ὁμοίως . . ὑπολειπομένους—the conjecture ὁμοίως seems to be clearly right. Even when ὁμοίως is rendered ‘consistent’ and taken as pred. with ὑπολειπομένους, it remains very awkward that ἐπιτηδεῖους and πολεμίους imply ἡμῶν, whereas ὁμοίους must imply ἑαυτούς. The previous ὁμοίους used in a quite different sense in this series of closely connected sentences is against the adj. ὁμοίως τε καὶ οὐδὲν ἥσσαν is a Thucydidean way of saying ‘just as must as before.’

§ 4 l. 22. πειθόμενοι μὲν—the steps of the argument, which is difficult to follow to ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι and has given rise to much discussion, are as follows: (1) if you punish M., you will act as Justice and Interest alike demand; (2) it may be said that Justice is on their side and against you (εἰ γάρ); (3) even if it is, you must follow the dictates of Interest (εἰ δὲ δῆ).

24. οὐ χαριεῖσθε—because they will still hate you.

25. δικαίωσέσθε—‘you will punish yourselves’ (instead of them) by proclaiming to all that you have no right to exert authority.

26. εἰ γάρ—γάρ does not introduce the reason for the preceding statement, but = ‘it is true that,’ as in c. 43, 5 (Stahl in Rhein. Mus. 1901). οὐ χρεών is acc. abs. On the form of condition (cf. I. 38, VI. 92) Goodwin points out that it is “a perfectly natural combination, each part having its proper force.” If they were justified, you must have no right to your empire: εἰ δὲ δῆ . . . κολάζεσθαι (mid.) proceeds on this assumption. If you persist in ruling (τοῦτο δρᾶν), even though you have no right to do so, then your interests require that you punish them, as you have others. The only alternative (ἢ = ‘otherwise’) is, you must give up empire: you must run no risks (ἐκ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου = ἀκινδύνως) and play an honourable part.

30. παύεσθαι . . ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι—Cleon echoes words attributed to Pericles at II. 63. ἀνδραγαθίζομαι was, it would seem, in use among the aristocrats who favoured a peace policy; cf. for the noun with ‘a political or social reference’ c. 57, 1, 64, 4 (Neil, Append. to Aristoph. Eq.).

§ 5 l. 31. τῇ τε αὐτῇ ζημία—viz. as that by which τά τε δίκαια . . . καὶ τὰ ξύμφορα ποιήσετε—the one I recommend. (a) This is usually explained, after the schol., ‘the same that they would have inflicted on you had they succeeded.’ But (1) it is unlikely that ζημία would be used without explanation, of the destruction Mytilene had sought to bring on Athens: and (2) τῇ αὐτῇ can only be so explained by the assumption that the sentence, simple in form, is strangely confused in thought. We need such an addition as in II. 67 τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀμύνεσθαι οἷσπερ καὶ . . . ὑπῆρξαν. (b) Steup explains ‘the same as you agreed to yesterday,’ but this seems a strange way of saying ‘uphold your decision.’ Also the reference in τῇ αὐτῇ should be found in the context immediately preceding; c. 62 τῇ μέντοι αὐτῇ ἰδέα, VII. 39, 1. The reference in the version given above is, it is true, a little remote, but εἰ δὲ δὴ . . . ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι is practically parenthetical.

32. οἱ διαφεύγοντες—cf. οἱ διαβάλλοντες c. 4, οἱ ἐπαγόμενοι II. 2, οἱ προδιδόντες II. 5. The temporal force is lost, and the partic. becomes a substantive. But the plot is referred to in aorist, as having preceded the escape.

37. ἐπεξέρχονται καὶ διολλύναι—‘follow up (the wrong they inflict) even to the length of destroying their enemy utterly.’ The mss. have διόλλυνται, which can only yield a very artificial sense. Their own utter destruction is not what they seek. The inf. is of purpose.

38. ύφορώμενοι, ‘eyeing with misgiving.’ All edd. refer to the famous ‘odisse quem laeseris’ of Tac. for the sentiment.

39. ὁ γὰρ . . . παθών—this applies to Athens, which has been attacked ἀνευ προφάσεως. ‘He who has been injured needlessly is more dangerous when he has escaped (the plot to destroy him), than an enemy on equal terms,’ i.e. where equal offence has been given on both sides. Mytilene knew Athens would be implacable if she escaped.

§ 7 l. 42. γενόμενοι . . . τῇ γνώμῃ—‘place yourselves in thought as near (the moment of) the injury as possible, and (think) how.’ γ. τῇ γνώμῃ=διαροηθέντες (I. 143). (Possibly τότ’ is lost after παντός.)

44. ἀνταπόδοτε, ‘repay.’ Cf. ‘Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord: I will repay.’

45. πρὸς τὸ παρὸν αὐτίκα with μαλακισθέντες, ‘at their present plight,’ for τὸ αὐτίκα παρὸν: the position of the adv. is not very rare in tragedy, e.g. Aesch. PI. 1013 τῷ φρονούντι μὴ καλῶς (Jebb on Soph. OT. 1294). Here αὐτίκα gains emphasis in contrast with ποτέ by its position. For the pleonasm edd. compare i. 95 ἐν τῷ τότε παρόντι, i. 123 τῶν ἐπειτα μελλόντων. (παραντίκα has been conjectured for παρόν αὐτίκα, and τότε for ποτέ.)

48. παράδειγμα σαφὲς καταστήσατε . . ζημιωσόμενον—for the partic., as with δηλοῦν, δῆλον or φανερόν ποιεῖν, cf. Soph. El. 24 σαφῆ σημεῖα φαίνειν ἐσθλὸς εἰς ἡμᾶς γεγώς.

50. τότε—ὅδε referring to what precedes, as often in speeches.

41 § 1 l. 2. Διόδοτος—not elsewhere heard of.

42 § 1 l. 3. μεμφομένους—equivalent to μεμφομένους καὶ ἀξιούντας, the brachylogy being made easier by the preceding τοὺς προθέντας τὴν δ., the persons censured.

5. δύο . . ὀργήν—some make τάχος τε καὶ ὀργήν subj. of εἶναι, removing the comma, comparing cc. 40, 2, 57, 3, 75, 1. The parallels do not seem to prove the point.

6. τὸ μὲν=τάχος. This passage is directly aimed at Cleon, who had deprecated χρόνον διατριβήν, thus showing his own folly, and had displayed the vehemence to which the ignorant and shallow-minded are prone. γίγνεσθαι, 'to be found.'

§ 2 l. 9. μὴ διδασκάλους τῶν πραγμάτων γ.—'are not to explain affairs,' i.e. how they are to be conducted. λόγοι personified, like πειθῶ. διαμάχομαι as in c. 40.

10. ἰδίᾳ τι αὐτῷ διαφέρει—'he has some private interest.'

13. φράσαι—'give guidance.'

14. τι αἰσχρὸν πείσαι—'to carry a disgraceful proposal.' Cf. c. 59, 2.

15. οὐκ . . ἡγείται—οὐ can appear after εἰ . . μὲν, provided the indic. is used, as in i. 121 εἰ οἱ μὲν . . οὐκ ἀπεροῦσιν. Xen. Anab. vii. 1, 29 εἰ βάρβαρον μὲν πόλιν οὐδεμίαν ἠθελήσαμεν κατασχεῖν.

16. εὖ δὲ διαβαλὼν—Cleon got a name for skill in διαβολή, as several passages in Aristoph. Equites show.

§ 3 l. 17. χαλεπώτατοι δὲ . . ἐπίδειξιν τινα—'most difficult to meet are those in particular (καί) who by anticipation impute (to an opponent) a sort of rhetorical display to get money.' χαλεπώτατοι does not mean to exclude the εὖ διαβαλὼν, who also—as the καί shows—is χαλεπώτατος as imputing to his opponent a desire to display his rhetorical skill; cf. c. 38, 2. But those who say that bribery is the motive are singled out.

The emphasis is on ἐπὶ χρήμασι, which accordingly is in an unusual order: it belongs to ἐπίδειξιν. The point of τινα is that an ἐπίδειξις proper was not delivered in the Ecclesia.

20. ἀξυνετώτερος . . ἀδικώτερος—'judged more of a fool than a knave.' The double compar. as regularly where two qualities in the same object are contrasted: ἰὼ στρατηγοὶ πλείονες ἢ βελτίονες.

23. μετὰ ἀξυνεσίας—'besides his (seeming) folly,' a characteristic substitute for μετὰ τοῦ ἀξύνετος γίγνεσθαι.

§ 4 l. 27. ἂν πεισθῇεν—viz. the state. The change to plur. is made easy by the intervention of τῶν πολιτῶν.

§ 5 l. 29. ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'on equal terms,' is parallel to ἐκφοβοῦντα.

31. σῶφρονα—a very moderate criticism of the dangerous tendency now manifesting itself in Athenian public life, since the death of Pericles, to give too much weight to the πιθανώτατοι (c. 36, 6). σῶφρων was esp. associated with those opposed to extreme democracy; cf. c. 62, 4. For τῷ πλείστα εἰς βουλευόντι, 'he whose counsel is generally good,' we should expect, at first sight, something like τῷ πιστὰ συμβουλεύοντι (conjectured by Weil), 'he whose counsel is followed,' in contrast with τὸν μὴ τυχόντα γνώμης, in the sense, 'he whose advice is rejected'; cf. πείσας and μὴ τυχών in § 3, κατορθῶν and ἐπιτυχῶν below. But in stating the principle that ought to be followed, the moderate Diodotus criticizes what the people professed to wish, viz. to reward good (not merely persuasive) counsellors. But in rewards the persuasive was mistaken for the good. And τὸν μὴ τυχόντα γνώμης is no doubt intentionally ambiguous, for, in contrast with πείσας, it does mean 'he who fails to carry his opinion'; but, in contrast with τῷ εἰς βουλευόντι, 'not fortunate in his advice' means 'wrong.' 'Who fails in counsel' will keep up the two meanings. Cf. Aesch. PI. 204 τὰ λῶστα βουλευῶν πιθεῖν . . οὐκ ἠδυνήθην. (The intentional ambiguity of this passage has escaped notice.)

32. ἀλλὰ μὴδ' ἐλασσοῦν—'but not to curtail . . either,' as might happen in the case of his being charged with corruption.

οὐχ ὅπως . . ἀλλὰ μὴδέ—non modo (non) . . sed ne . . quidem. For the sentiment cf. Demosth. III. 18 οὐ λέγει τις τὰ βέλτιστα; ἀναστὰς ἄλλος εἰπάτω, μὴ τοῦτον αἰτιάσθω.

§ 6 l. 36. πρὸς χάριν—'to please' the people.

37. ὀρέγοιτο—sc. ἡκιστα ἄν. τῷ αὐτῷ is explained by χαρίζομενος κτλ.

43 § 1 l. 2. καὶ ὑποπτεύεται κτλ. —‘if a mere suspicion that a man is speaking for gain, and is offering the best advice in spite of it.’ We cannot render ‘though he offers the best advice, he does so for gain,’ as is commonly done, for the μέν-clause must be our though (cf. Jebb on Soph. O.C. 1536). But there is no need to supply δοκῇ from ὑποπτεύεται to suit the δέ-clause if we notice that μέν . . . δέ is inserted merely for the sake of a verbal antithesis, and that the sense is simply κέρδους ἐνεκα τὰ βέλτιστα λέγειν.

4. φθονήσαντες . . . κερδῶν —‘feeling jealous of the uncertain impression of his gains,’ i.e. jealous of his supposed gains. That his advice is helpful is ex hypothesi certain.

6. τῆς πόλεως ἀφαιρούμεθα—the same consti. c. 58. 1.

§ 2 l. 6. καθέστηκε δέ—‘it has come to this, that.’ ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐθέος is opposed to ἀπάτῃ below.

9. τὰ δεινότατα . . . πείσαι—‘to get the most atrocious proposals adopted.’

§ 3 l. 12. μόνην τε πόλιν κτλ.—‘so we are the only state which it is impossible to benefit openly, without recourse to deception.’ It is disputed whether μόνην πόλιν means (1) ‘a state alone,’ as distinct from the individual citizens, or (2) ‘(ours) is the only state which,’ as pred. to ἡμᾶς supplied. The latter is surely right, for (1) Athens is contrasted with ἡ σῶφρων πόλις in c. 42, 5, and this contrast is kept up through c. 43, 1, and (2) there is no suggestion in the context that the state is more suspicious than the individual.

διὰ τὰς περινοίας—‘excessive shrewdness,’ by which it thinks it detects self-interest in the honest speaker. The word only here.

14. ἀνθ-υποπτεύεται—‘is in return suspected.’

§ 4 l. 15. χρή δὲ . . . σκοπούντων—‘but in dealing with the most important interests and in such a case as this it ought to be assumed that we speakers take a somewhat wider forecast than you whose view is circumscribed,’ i.e. whose judgment is formed in a short debate. τι with περαιτέρω, as in μᾶλλον τι. ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε: its possible meanings are ‘at such a time,’ and ‘in such a case.’

18. ὑπεύθυνον—a speaker was liable to the γραφή παρανόμων.

19. πρὸς ἀνέθυνον . . . ἀκρόασιν—‘as opposed to your attention to it, which is irresponsible.’

§ 5 l. 21. σωφρονέστερον ἂν ἐκρίνετε—‘you would be more circumspect (cf. c. 42, 5) in your decisions’ (ll. 40, 2).

22. πρὸς ὀργὴν ἦντιν’ ἂν τύχητε—‘in the anger of the moment.’ Grammatically ζημιούντες is supplied to τύχητε, and πρὸς, according to a common idiom, is repeated to ἦντινα; but no doubt the speaker would not be conscious of such ellipse. ἦντινα without ἂν is according to epic idiom; but it is very probable that ἦντιν’ ἂν is the true reading. (No other emendation is to be thought of: ἦν τι ἀτυχήτε is impossible, if only because ἀτυχεῖν in this context means ‘to fail in a request.’ Nor must σφαλόντες be supplied to τύχητε: for this would mean that punishment is inflicted in the same mood as that in which the error was committed. But that is not the point.)

25. εἰ=ὅτι.

§ 2 l. 5. ἦν τε καὶ . . εἰ— for εἰεν most edd. accept εἰαν= 44
‘(I shall not bid you) spare them.’ ἔχοντας, sc. ἀποφώνω, is a conjecture for ἔχοντες, and unsatisfactory. The correction is uncertain, and it is doubtful if οὐ κελεύσω can be supplied legitimately. It is likely that something is lost before εἰεν: e.g. Bergk suggested οὐ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἄξιοι ἂν ξιγηνῶμεν. (εἰεν as exclamatory which Classen, with some doubt, kept, is impossible. Its use is in assent to what precedes and in passing on to a new point: it is not appropriate here.)

§ 3 l. 11. τοῦτο ὅ is rendered ‘as for this that.’ (1) There is no authority for this phrase used adverbially in this way: hence the conjecture τοῦτον, governed by πάντῃ. Otherwise we must assume an anacoluthon. (2) But CG read τοῦτο ὧ, and quite possibly this is right. τοῦτο ἀντισχυριζόμενος ὧ Κλέων ισχυρίζεται=‘while maintaining this in opposition to what C. maintains’ (cf. τοῖς ἐγκλήμασι ἀντεροῦντες l. 73). περὶ τοῦ . . ἔχοντος is then exepexegetic of τοῦτο, just as ἐς τὸ λοιπὸν . . ἔσεσθαι is of ὧ (=ἐκείνῳ ὧ). Both insist on the future, but one on τὸ ἐνυμέρον, the other on τὸ καλόν.

14. προθείσει—depending on ἐνυμέρον ὑμῶν, conditional.

§ 4 l. 19. πρὸς—‘in view of.’

21. τῶν δικαίων—‘arguments of justice,’ as in Demosth. de Cor. 6, 9. Το δεῖν and χρῆσθαι supply ἡμῶν.

§ 1 l. 1. θανάτου . . πρόκεινται—θανάτου gen. of definition. 45
ζημία πρόκειται (see crit. note) is more likely in view of πασῶν τῶν ζημιῶν below. Το πολλὰν . . ἀνατημάτων supply ‘as the penalty.’

6. τῷ ἐπιβουλεύματι—instrumental.

§ 2 l. 7. πόλις τε ἀφισταμένη—'so in the case of a state.'

8. τῇ δοκήσει—'in its own opinion.' An effective reply to Cleon's argument from the fact that M. had taken Athens at a disadvantage.

9. τούτῳ—revolt.

§ 3 l. 12. ἐπεὶ . . γε—not a common combination; Iliad IX. 425 ἐπεὶ οὐ σφισιν ἦδε γ' ἐτοίμη, Pind. Ol. IX. 40 ἐπεὶ τό γε λοιδορῆσαι θεοὺς ἐχθρὰ σοφία. The γε merely emphasizes διεξελήθασι.

13. προστιθέντες—'continually adding to them.' For εἴ πως with a perf. preceding see M.T. § 489, esp. Aristoph. Av. 120.

16. παραβαινομένων—there are two tenable explanations of this: (1) impersonal gen. abs. as in I. 116 ἐσαγγελλέντων M.T. § 848, 'transgressions being committed'; (2) sc. τῶν μεγίστων ἀδικημάτων, which would be internal accus. to παραβαίνω in the act. form, as in ἀδικῶ ἀδικημα. The matter is rendered impossible of certain solution by the perplexing καὶ τοῦτο παραβαίνεται. We expect, of course, the sense 'mild penalties being disregarded,' and presently, 'the death penalty is disregarded,' but how this can be got out of the Gk. as it stands is not apparent, unless we take an etymological sense of παραβαίνω, 'pass by,' which is found occasionally in the orators, and interpret τοῦτο below as put loosely for ἡ ζημία τοῦ θανάτου. Against this is not so much the fact that Thuc. does not elsewhere use παραβαίνω thus, but much more that παραβαίνω ζημίαν is stranger than any instance in the orators and that the proximity of ἀδικημάτων makes it unnatural.

18. καὶ τοῦτο ὅμως παραβαίνεται—the conjectures are (1) κὰν τούτῳ (Krüger) 'and under these circumstances,' with παραβαίνεται impers. But it should be ἐν τούτοις (cf. Jebb on Soph. Ant. 39); ἐν τούτῳ = 'meanwhile,' or 'in this point.' (2) καὶ ταῦτα, sc. τὰ ἀδικήματα (Hude; cf. 2 above). I should prefer καὶ ταῦτά 'and the same offences are committed.'

§ 4 l. 19. δεινότερον . . δέος—'a terror more terrible'; cf. VII. 68 ἐχθροὶ καὶ ἐχθιστοί.

20. ἢ τόδε γε—'else this,' with emphasis on the second alternative (Neil on Aristoph. Eg. 413). Notice τόδε after τούτου, not very rare; e.g. Soph. Ant. 296.

ἢ μὲν πενία κτλ.—to πενία is opposed the πῶτερ—ἐξουσία—that results from wealth. A poor man is emboldened by necessity, as a rich man is made covetous by insolence and pride.

23. αἱ δ' ἄλλαι ξυντυχίαι . . κινδύνους—'the other conditions of life,' as they arise—temporary rather than permanent : these fill men with a sudden passion (ὄργῃ), 'as each (ξυντυχία) is overpowered by some irrepressible power'—such e.g. as an overwhelming desire for independence. ὄργῃ τῶν ἀνθρώπων corresponds to τὴν τόλμαν παρέχονσα and τὴν πλεονεξίαν π. of the other clauses, while ἀνήμεστόν τι corresponds to ἀνάγκη and ἔβρις καὶ φρόνημα. Of the many alterations proposed, only τὸν ἀνθρώπον for τῶν ἀνθρώπων needs notice. It is not an improvement : for there is a point in τῶν ἀ., 'passion in those men' whom they befall, always there, like πλεονεξία and τόλμα, and ready to be called out by a favourable ξυντυχία. (Not 'mankind,' which would here be ἀνθρώπων, as ὄργῃ is without article. It has been proposed to refer ἐκάστη τις to ὄργῃ, but this would leave ξυντυχίαι too vague, and there would be little point in ἐκάστη τις.)

§ 5 l. 26. ἐπὶ παντί—'in every case' of those just alluded to ; cf. ἐπ' οὐδενὶ τῶν τοιούτων Demosth. XXI. 65.

ὁ μὲν—first comes Desire, next Hope—and then the attempt. Note the personification here.

27. τὴν . . ἐπιβουλὴν ἐκφροντίζων—'thinking out the plot.' The schol. has ἐγχείρησιν on this word, so that the writer of it must have found ἐπιβολήν, 'attempt,' which most mss. give, the only objection to which is that the subst. is not found elsewhere in this sense before Polybius.

28. τὴν εὐπορίαν τῆς τύχης—'suggesting the ready help of Chance.' Hope deludes them into a fancy that at the critical moment Chance will favour them. Though a subjective gen. does not occur with εὐπορία elsewhere, τῆς τύχης is plainly subjective here ; cf. VII. 61 τὸ τῆς τύχης κὰν μεθ' ἡμῶν ἐλπίσαντες στήναι, V. 113. (τύχη cannot = 'success' here, cf. § 7, nor 'their fortunes.')

30. ὄντα ἀφανῇ—i.e. ἔρως and ἐλπίς, 'because (not though) unseen.' Were they φανεραί, men would see that they could not be counted upon. As it is, πλεῖστα βλέπτονσι by luring them on. Cf. V. 103 ἐπὶ τὰς ἀφανεῖς (ἐλπίδας) καθίστανται, and the next sentence.

§ 6 l. 31. ἐπ' αὐτοῖς—besides ἔρως and ἐλπίς.

33. καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὑποδεεστέρων—'even with insufficient means.'

34. οὐχ ἥσσον—i.e. even more than men.

35. περὶ τῶν μεγίστων τε—sc. κινδυνεύουσι. For the τε, which, though found only in C, is probably right, cf. IV. 80 ἐτοιμῶν ὄντων τρέφειν τε καὶ ἐπὶ ἀποστάσει σφᾶς ἐπικαλουμένων.

36. μετὰ πάντων . . ἐδόξασεν—'each individual acting with the whole community . . rates himself considerably above the reality,' i.e. exaggerates his own strength. The reading of the best MSS. is αὐτῶν for αὐτόν. For δοξάζω with personal obj. cf. Xen. Cyr. v. 5, 46 ἀλκιμώτατος δοξάζεται εἶναι. ἐπὶ πλεόν τι together.

§ 7 l. 38. ἀπλῶς—c. 38, 7.

39. πολλῆς εὐθείας, ὅστις—'(it is a mark) of much simplicity, if anyone supposes.' Cf. Xen. Hell. II. 3, 51 νομίζω προστάτου ἔργον εἶναι οἷον δεῖ, ὅς ἂν . . μὴ ἐπιτρέπη. It would be more usual to have πολλὴ εὐθεία (ἐστίν) ὅστις, or εὐθέστατον ὅστις.

46 § 1 l. 2. ἐχεγγύω—affording a good ἐγγύη, security that other states will not follow the example of Mytilene.

βουλεύσασθαι—'come to a decision.'

4. οὐκ—redundant.

5. ὅτι ἐν βραχυτάτῳ—notice the regular order with ὅτι and ὥς + superl.

§ 2 l. 7. καὶ ἀποστᾶσα—'when revolt has actually taken place.'

9. τὴν δαπάνην ἀποδοῦναι καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ὑποτελεῖν—here, naturally, the least is made of the terms dealt out by Athens to revolted allies who submitted. Independent allies, when reduced after revolting, had also to pull down their walls and to hand over their ships to Athens. In I. 98 Thuc. gives a summary of the treatment dealt out to them much less favourable to Athens. By ὑποτελεῖν is meant φόρον ὑποτελεῖς εἶναι.

10. τίνα οἴεσθε ἦντινα—see on c. 39, 7.

12. παρατενεῖσθαι—'be strained to the utmost extremity.'

13. τὸ αὐτὸ δύνатаι—cf. I. 141 τὴν αὐτὴν δοῦλωσιν δύνатаι.

§ 3 l. 16. τῆς προσόδου . . ἀπ' αὐτῆς—the art. not repeated with a verbal substantive (πρόσοδος—προσιέναι). The words necessary to complete the sense of the subst. generally follow it, as in I. 18 τὴν κατάλυσιν ἐκ τῆς Ἑλλάδος, but occasionally precede, as in II. 18 κατὰ τὴν ἄλλην πορείαν ἢ σχολαυότης.

18. τῷδε—viz. τῇ προσόδῳ.

§ 4 l. 20. ἀκριβεῖς—'exacting': so in I. 99 Thuc. says ἀκριβῶς ἔπρασσον of Athens in relation to her allies.

22. ἐς χρημάτων λόγον—ἐς λ. is 'on the score of.' The phrase occurs also in Lysias (XIX. 61), and εἰς χρήματα is found.

24. ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων τῆς ἐπιμελείας—‘by practical precautions.’ Some render ‘by taking care of our actions’; but the former seems more natural, and cf. VI. 40 ἔργῳ φυλασσομένη.

§ 5 l. 26. ἐλεύθερον, by right; βία ἀρχόμενον, in fact. βία = ‘in its despite’; cf. I. 43 μὴ ξυμμάχους δέχεσθε βία ἡμῶν, 68. Diodotus alludes to the true position of Lesbos; cf. c. 10.

27. πρὸς—‘to the side of.’

§ 6 l. 32. τούτου—i.e. τοῦ ἀφίστασθαι.

ὅτι ἐπ’ ἐλάχιστον—viz. of the inhabitants.

§ 1 l. 1. τοῦτο—internal accus., ‘in this.’

§ 2 l. 6. ἀποστήσασι—sc. τὴν πόλιν.

7. τῆς ἀντικαθισταμένης—‘which is ranging itself against us.’

8. ἐς πόλεμον ἐπέρχεσθε—either ἔρχεσθε ἐς πόλεμον or ἐπέρχεσθε alone would be usual. Here we must supply αὐτῇ, and take ἐς of the end in view.

§ 3 l. 9. εἰ with fut. indic., ‘if you are going to.’

12. ἀδικήσετε . . κτείνοντες—‘you will be guilty of the crime of’; a legal use.

13. καταστήσετε—‘bring about,’ unusual without a predicative adj.; cf. (Classen) IV. 92 πολλὴν ἄδειαν κατεστήσαμεν.

16. προδειξάντων—‘as you will have published abroad.’

§ 4 l. 18. καὶ εἰ ἡδίκησαν, μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι—‘even if they did wrong, to pass it over.’ μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι, dissimulare, which occurs in several authors, is on the principle of οὐ φημι.

19. ὅ—‘the element.’ Thuc. is partial to the neut. sing. collective for a masc. plur.

§ 5 l. 20. καὶ τοῦτο—τοῦτο anticipates ἐκόντας ἡμᾶς ἀδικηθῆναι: cf. VI. 85 καὶ ἡμῖν τοῦτο ὠφελεῖ, οἷκ ἦν . . . ἀλλ’ ἦν . .

22. δικαίως—i.e. as strict justice allows. δεῖ refers to interest, as in § 4.

23. τὸ Κλέωνος κτλ.—made in c. 40, 4: ‘Cleon’s claim, namely the identity of justice and expediency in the punishment, is found to be impossible of being realized at once in such a punishment,’ viz. ἐν τῷ διαφθεῖραι. The sentence is illogical, for either τὸ αὐτό or ἅμα should have been omitted.

§ 1 l. 1. τάδε—viz. the proposals about to be made.

2. πλέον νείμαντες—see c. 3, 1 n.

3. οὐδὲ ἐγώ—see c. 40, 2.

προσάγεσθαι—middle, as regularly in this sense; the indef. subject must be supplied.

5. ἀπέπεμψεν—see c. 37, 1.

6. καθ' ἡσυχίαν—'calmly.'

§ 2 l. 8. τοῖς πολεμίοις—thinking of the Peloponnesians. That Athens should show wisdom (1) calmly judging the guilty, (2) acquitting the democratic party, would be more effective against her enemies than a hasty exercise of brute strength, of vis consili capers. πρὸς τοὺς ἐναντίους is to be taken with κρείσσων ἐστί.

10. ἐπιών—'if he goes to work.'

49 § 1 l. 3. ἀντιπάλων—'equally matched' (here, in argument), a common meaning of ἀντίπαλος in Thuc.

4. ἦλθον μὲν ἐς ἀγῶνα ὅμως τῆς δόξης—'engaged in a conflict of opinion after all,' i.e. in spite of the revulsion of feeling (c. 36). ὅμως, as Porpo pointed out (Proleg. i. p. 290) implies a clause which is omitted; and, in spite of the remoteness of reference, the interpretation seems warranted by such passages as c. 28, and vii. 1. Some render τῆς δόξης 'about the decree,' but the gen. should express the feeling, as in νῦν ἀγὼν εὐψυχίας Eur. Med. 403, and βούλευμα or ψήφισμα would be expected for 'decree' here.

§ 2 l. 9. προτέρας—the best mss. have δευτέρας, as the result, no doubt, of an unfortunate conjecture, based on εἰ φθάσειαν below.

§ 3 l. 14. οἶνω . . πεφυραμένα—'barley-meal kneaded with wine . .,' into cakes, μᾶζαι, of the kind called οἰνοῦτται. φυρᾶν, not φύρειν, is the form of the word in this sense.

§ 4 l. 21. ὅσον . . ἀνεγνωκέναι—'as for him to have read,' like ὅσον ἀποζῆν in l. 2. ὅσον practically = ὥστε.

23. ὑστέρα αὐτῆς—as this is predicative, the ἐπι- in the verb is pleonastic, if, as elsewhere, the verb = 'is brought into port after.' It is possible that ἐπι- implies haste, as in ἐπιβοηθεῖν: we expect such an allusion here, and Steup suggests αὐτίκ' for αὐτῆς.

24. παρὰ τοσοῦτον . . ἦλθε—this and similar phrases—παρὰ μικρὸν ἔλθειν, παρ' οὐδὲν ἐ.—are followed either by gen. or, more often, infin.: e.g. Herod. ix. 33 παρ' ἐν πάλαισμα ἔδραμε νικᾶν. παρὰ τοσοῦτον = 'within, up to, so short a distance.' κίνδυνος means the danger of destruction, and the gen. is the same as with ἐγγύς.

§ 1 l. 2. ἀπέπεμψεν—to Athens; see cc. 28, 35, 48.

5. χιλίων—the number is astonishing, and nothing approaching it is suggested by anything in the preceding narrative. Hence it is thought that Α = χιλίων is a corruption of Α' = τριάκοντα.

§ 2 l. 8. κλήρους . . ποιήσαντες—i.e. the late owners became hereditary tenants and paid an annual sum to the Athenian 'cleruchs.' Thuc. (and Ephorus, as copied by Diodorus XII. 55, assume that all the land was thus divided, except that of Methymna: this would bring each κλῆρος to about 96 acres (as Clinton says): but, of course, not the whole of the κλῆρος would be under cultivation. Apparently all the land was owned by oligarchs. The new κλῆροι would, of course, cut across the boundaries of former estates.

11. κληρούχους—2700 poor citizens chosen by lot. They doubtless served to form a garrison: but in 412 B.C. there cannot have been anything like this number of Athenians in Lesbos VIII. 22; it is assumed that many of the cleruchs subsequently returned to Athens.

13. ἐκάστου with κλήρου. The mid. denotes a reciprocal arrangement. ἀργυρίον is prob. object of φέρειν, and δύο μνᾶς with the gen. is in appos. to it.

§ 3 l. 15. τὰ ἐν τῇ ἡπείρῳ—several places called Ἀκταῖαι πόλεις—Antandros being one. These became tributary allies.

§ 1 l. 2. Νικίου—first mention of him in Thuc.

4. ἢ κεῖται . . ἐχρῶντο δὲ αὐτῇ—it is not usual to have the rel. repeated in the second clause VI. 4 τὸ χωρίον οὗ νῦν ἡ πόλις ἐστὶ καὶ ὃ πρῶτον ἐτειχίσθη, unless the one is pos., the other neg., as in II. 43 οὐκ ἐν ᾧ κεῖνται μᾶλλον. ἀλλ' ἐν ᾧ ἡ δόξα καταλείπεται. In the second clause the rel. is often replaced by the required case of αὐτός. A similar omission or substitution is frequent in Lat., esp. in Livy, as XXIII. 8 cum quo steterat nec cum patria maiestas sententia depulerat. So, too, in Engl., as Hooker 'Whom though to know be life, and joy to make mention of His name,' Massaul 'To whom she seemed to listen, but did not hear them.'

§ 2 l. 7. τὴν φυλακὴν . . εἶναι—Athens had at least one φρούριον at Salamis, and a few ships there maintained a not very efficient blockade of the port of Megara.

9. τοὺς τε Πελοποννησίους—parallel to τοῖς τε Μεγαρέσιν

. . ἐσπλεῖν, and probably, like that clause, depending on τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις φυλακὴν εἶναι=τοὺς Ἀθηναίους φυλάσσεσθαι. This κατὰ σύνεσιν constr. cannot be paralleled in prose, but it would be ordinary in tragedy: see Jebb on Soph. Antig. 216. Thus τοὺς II. is the anticipatory accus., for ὅπως οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι κτλ.: the differing constr., first ὅπως, then infin., after a single verb, is not unusual. (Several emendations have been proposed, of which πρὸς τε Πελ., depending on φυλακὴν εἶναι and τοὺς τε Πελ. σκοπῶν are worth notice.)

10. μὴ ποιῶνται . . αὐτόθεν—viz. from Nisaea, the harbour of Megara. The allusion in αὐτόθεν is not quite the same as in the previous case.

11. τὸ πρὶν γενόμενον—‘the previous incident’ occurred in the autumn of 429 B.C. The Pel. intended to surprise the Piræus, but contented themselves with a descent on Salamis, which caused great alarm at Athens, and led at once to measures for the protection of the Athenian harbours (II. 93).

§ 3 l. 13. ἐλὼν οὖν . . προύχοντε—when, as in the case of Megara (I. 103), a city had long walls running down to its harbour, it was usual to prolong the walls across the mouth, and to leave only a small passage between two towers, forming what was called a κληστός λιμὴν. ἀπὸ τῆς Νισαίας προύχοντε are to be taken together. The order is unusual, but (1) ἀπὸ τῆς N. gains prominence by its position (cf. Jebb on Soph. Antig. 325), (2) it is certainly not stranger than II. 7 πρὸς ταῖς αὐτοῦ ὑπαρχούσαις ἐξ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας τοῖς τάκεινων ἐλομένοις, where ἐξ . . Σικελίας goes with ἐλομένοις. (If taken with ἐλὼν, ἀπὸ τῆς N. is rendered either (a) ‘on the side toward N.’ or (b) ‘on the side away from N.’ But (1) in either case δύνω πύργῳ then raises a difficulty, because they are then both on the island, and above, it was one tower: (2) neither meaning has really been proved possible: in the passages quoted for (b) ἀπό=‘at a distance from’ with a verb of rest. If not taken with προύχοντε, ἀπὸ τῆς N. would naturally=‘starting from N.’ with N. for a base; (3) with (a) it is impossible to explain καὶ τὸ ἐκ τῆς ἡπείρου, which must denote a different place from ἀπὸ τῆς N.)

15. ἐς τὸ μεταξὺ τῆς νήσου—supply καὶ τῆς ἡπείρου, as in Dem. de Cor. 26 τὸν μεταξὺ χρόνον τῶν ὅρκων, ‘the interval between (that time, and) the oaths.’ Aristoph. Av. 187 ἐν μέσῳ δῆπουθεν ἀήρ ἐστι γῆς, and often. Sometimes the other limit is expressed. (It might mean ‘to the part of the island lying between,’ as Isocr. iv. 70 ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ τῆς χώρας, but on the whole this seems less likely.)

16. ἀπετείχιζε καὶ τὸ ἐκ τῆς ἡ.—‘he proceeded to build a wall on the side facing the mainland as well,’ apparently at the island end of the bridge. The καὶ refers to πρῶτον.

§ 4 l. 20. καὶ ἐν τῇ νήσῳ τείχος—the καὶ refers to ἀπετείχιζε τὸ ἐκ τῆς ἡπείρου. (We cannot be confident about the interpretation of these operations at Minoa, because (1) the account—as is often the case with Thuc. when he writes of topographical details—is not clear, and (2) the coastline has changed, and there is no longer an island at all.)

§ 1 l. 3. πολιορκεῖσθαι—‘endure the siege,’ a use of the inf. 52 frequent with ἀδικεῖσθαι, and found occasionally both in Greek and Latin.

§ 2 l. 8. εἰρημένον γὰρ ἦν—sc. βία μὴ ἐλεῖν. But this is just what the Pel. had tried to do in 429 B.C.: their views had changed.

11. ὅσα πολέμῳ χωρία ἔχουσιν—the original intention of Sparta had been to destroy the Athenian empire: since the failure at Lesbos they expect much less. That failure had evidently strengthened the peace party at Sparta.

14. λέγοντα—as in VII. 3; contrast II. 85 πέμπουσι ξυμβούλους κελεύοντες.

εἰ βούλονται . . οὐδένα—in this perplexing sentence. it is best (1) to make παραδοῦναι and χρῆσασθαι depend on βούλονται: (2) to make τοῦς τε . . οὐδένα the apodosis to this protasis. Then (1) τε . . δέ correspond (I. 11, 1, 25, 3, VI. 83, 1, VII. 81, 3, and in other authors not very seldom); (2) κολάζειν=‘they are ready to punish,’ unless we accept the conjecture κολάσειν. For the outline of the syntax cf. VII. 3 προπέμπει . . λέγοντα, εἰ βούλονται ἐξιέναι . . ἐτοῖμος εἶναι σπένδεσθαι. (It is impossible to render εἰ ‘whether,’ as though λέγοντα were ἐρωτῶντα.)

§ 3 l. 21. ἐν ὄσῳ—cf. c. 28, 1.

§ 4 l. 27. ἀγαθόν τι—the second τι is not impossible, but, in view of 53, 2, 68, 1, it is improbable.

§ 5 l. 28. προτάξαντες σφῶν αὐτῶν is generally rendered ‘having appointed as their advocates,’ but, in view of VI. 100 τριακοσίουσ σφῶν αὐτῶν . . προύταξαν (cf. c. 112 below), Hude is probably right in taking the gen. as partitive.

30. Αἰεμνήστου—a celebrated man, who had commanded the Plataeans at Marathon and Plataea.

relation depends on whether (1) the sentence is meant to be antithetic, so that πιστεύσαντες καὶ δεξάμενοι form a pair, and οἰόμενοι and ἡγούμενοι stand in causal relation to these respectively; or (2) οἰόμενοι καὶ ἡγούμενοι give the two grounds of πιστεύσαντες, and ἐν (with the mss.) ἄλλοις δεξάμενοι is subord.—either conditional or causal—to ἡγούμενοι: or (3) the sentence is developed as it proceeds, so that (α) οἰόμενοι καὶ δεξάμενοι—with either ἐν or ἂν ἄλλοις—give the cause of ἐποισάμεθα, and ἡγούμενοι gives the cause of δεξάμενοι: or (4) with δεξάμενοι subord. to ἡγούμενοι, πιστεύσαντες is similarly subord. of condition to οἰόμενοι. I decidedly prefer (3), because it gives a form of sentence to which Thuc. is certainly partial (Hache, de Partic. Thucyd. ii.); the main verb is followed by a partic.—here οἰόμενοι καὶ δεξάμενοι—that gives the cause; then this partic. itself develops another causal to itself; cf., for instance, c. 110 ἀγγέλλεται τοῖς Ἀμπρακιώτας ἐπιβοηθεῖν, βουλομένους . . . ξυμμεῖξαι, εἰδότας οὐδέν. The order of πιστεύσαντες tells against (1) and (4), and (2) is very artificial. The incoherence of § 1 is doubtless intentional, as in the case of the opening of Soph. Antig.

5. ἐν δικάσταῖς οὐκ ἂν ἄλλοις δεξάμενοι—the mss. have ἐν ἄλλοις, and for the repetition of the prep. in apposition vi. 68 ἤλθον ἐπὶ τὴν μητρόπολιν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς is quoted. But (1) in that passage and others like it, such as Lysias vi. 14 ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ, ἐν τῷ σεμνοτάτῳ δικαστηρίῳ, we have a second noun added to explain the first (cf. Jebb on Soph. Trach. 695): this is not so with ἐν ἄλλοις here (so Krüger). (2) Taking constr. (3) as explained in the last note, ἂν δεξάμενοι, 'would have consented to appear before no other judges,' gives a better sense than δεξάμενοι.

6. ὥσπερ καὶ ἔσμέν—'as we are actually doing.'

§ 2 l. 8. ἀμφοτέρων—τὸ νόμιμον and τὸ ἴσον.

9. ἡμαρτήκαμεν—the subj. perf., of what may turn out afterwards to have been the case, might have been used.

13. λόγον—i.e. μακρότερα εἰπεῖν, c. 52, 5.

14. τό τε ἐπερώτημα βραχὺ ὄν—accus. abs. co-ordinated with the preceding gen. abs., both expressing cause.

τὰ μὲν ἀληθῆ is obj. of ἀποκρίνασθαι: the infin. clause is subj. to γίγνεται. Hence ἐναντία, sc. ἡμῶν, is for ἐναντίον, which is awkward after τὰ ἀληθῆ: some think ἐναντίον should be read. The other view, that ἀποκρίνασθαι is exegetical, ἀληθὲς ἀποκρίνασθαι, is most improbable, and φ is then grammatically impossible.)

15. τὰ δὲ ψευδῇ—sc. ἀποκρίνασθαι.

16. ἔλεγχον ἔχει—‘can be confuted.’

§ 3 l. 18. εἰπόντας τι κινδυνεύειν—‘to say something and take our chance’=here ‘to say something if we must risk our lives’; the emphasis, as often in Gk. and Lat., on the partic., as in I. 20 βουλόμενοι δράσαντές τι καὶ (‘then’) κινδυνεύσαι, Soph. OC. 1038 χωρῶν ἀπείλει ‘threaten, but go,’ Trach. 592 εἰδέναι χρὴ δρῶσαν ‘you must act, if you would know.’

ὁ μὴ ῥηθεὶς λόγος=τὸ τὸν λόγον μὴ ῥηθῆναι, a frequent constr. in Greek and Silver Latin; cf. c. 66, 3, Demosth. Olynth. III. 34 οἶκοι μένων βελτίων=τὸ μένειν αὐτὸν βέλτιον ἐστὶ. See also c. 66, 3. The neg. in the phrase is regularly μὴ, whether the partic. is in attributive, or—as much oftener—in predicative position.

19. αἰτίαν—‘grievance,’ meaning probably ‘self-reproach,’ as in I. 140.

§ 4 l. 22. ἀγνώτες . . ἐπεσενεγκάμενοι—the subject contracts, being first both parties, but then the Plataeans only: this freedom is characteristic of Thuc.

21. πρὸς εἰδότας πάντα λελέξεται—‘you know all that can be said.’

26. ἡμῶν with προκαταγνόντες as well as ἀρετάς, ‘having formed the prejudice against us, that our merits’; cf. c. 45, 1.

27. αὐτό—viz. τὸ ἥσους εἶναι κτλ.

ἄλλοις χάριν φέροντες—‘gratifying others,’ viz. the Thebans. The subject of φέροντες would more naturally be the Lacedaemonians: if the text is sound—φερόντων has been conjectured—we recall the principle qui facit per alium facit per se.

§ 1 l. 1. δίκαια—cf. c. 44, 4.

πρὸς . . ἐς—no difference of meaning.

2. Θηβαίων=πρὸς τοὺς Θηβαίους.

§ 2 l. 10. φίλους νομίζοντας=εἰ φίλους νομίζετε (ἡμᾶς).

§ 3 l. 11. τὰ δ’ ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ—adverbial. The art. covers πρὸς.

§ 4 l. 15. καὶ γάρ—1) this could be taken together, =etenim, or (2) a correlative for καὶ could be sought in what follows, or (3) καὶ could be supposed to emphasize the concessive force of ἡπειρῶται ὄντες: most probably (1) is right, though some deny this use for Thuc.

16. μάχη—temporal, without ἐν; this dat. is used several times by Thuc. The Plataeans were always proud of the fact that the battle had been fought on their soil.

§ 5 l. 21. καὶ ὑμῖν . . ἰδίᾳ—as distinct from their services to the common cause.

22. ὅτεπερ δή—‘at the very time when,’ in 464 B.C.

23. τῶν . . ἀποστάντων depends on φόβος. For the position of the attrib. partic., not rare in Thuc. when other qualifying words are added, cf. II. 18 ἡ ἐν Ἴσθμῷ ἐπιμόνη γενομένη, c. 67, 3.

55 § 1 l. 4. δεομένων γὰρ ξυμμαχίας—in 519 or 509 B.C. (see on c. 68, 5) Plataea, πιεζέμενοι ὑπὸ Θηβαίων (Herod. VI. 108), applied to king Cleomenes to be admitted to alliance with Sparta.—Note (1) absence of noun with δεομένων, see c. 34, 3 n.: (2) gen. abs. though ἀπεώσασθε follows, a common sacrifice of form to sense in Herod. and Thuc.; for this variety cf. II. 5 ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ πάλιν (sc. αὐτῶν) ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἀποδώσειν αὐτοῖς.

7. ἀποικούντων—for the case here cf. II. 8 ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ἄλλως τε καὶ προειπόντων.

§ 2 l. 7. ἐν . . τῷ πολέμῳ—viz. ‘this war,’ as often in Thuc.

§ 3 l. 10. οὐκ ἠθελήσαμεν—εἰ=ὅτι, hence οὐ.

ὑμῶν κελυσάντων—this occurred in 429 B.C., when the Peloponnesians marched against Plataea. The demand was that Plataea should either join the Lacedaemonian alliance or remain neutral.

14. εὖ παθὼν—what services Plataea had received from Athens before she ‘won the alliance’ of 519 (or 509) B.C. is not known. τις, of course, means the Plataeans.

15. πολιτείας μετέλαβεν—this passage and c. 63 clearly imply that Athenian citizenship in some form was granted to Plataeans settling at Athens since the original alliance; and Isoer. Plat. 51, Pan. 49, Lysias XXIII. 2, and [Dem.] c. Neacr. do not make this assumption impossible. But in II. Thuc. speaks only of a ξυμμαχία between Plataea and Athens, and possibly Thuc. here anticipates. It is certain that citizenship was conferred on the Plataean refugees after the destruction of Plataea. For the ὧν omitted see c. 51, 1 n.

which is used of the orders issued by the head of a confederacy is imperf.

§ 1 l. 1. πολλὰ μὲν . . ἡδίκησαν, τὸ δὲ τελευταῖον . . 56
ξύνιστε—the form of the sentence shows that Θηβαῖοι is purposely placed in a prominent place; cf. what the Plataeans say at II. 71 μετὰ Θηβαίων τῶν ἡμῖν ἐχθίστων ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ ἦκετε.

§ 2 l. 4. καταλαμβάνοντας—conative.

5. ἱερομηνία—the attack occurred τελευτῶντος τοῦ μηνός (II. 2), but whether the holiday was connected with the new moon is unknown. The attempt was made at about ten o'clock (περὶ πρῶτον ὕπνον) on the night, probably, of April 4, 431.

§ 3 l. 9. εἰ γάρ κτλ.—‘if you are going to base your estimate of Justice on your present interest (which is, to favour Thebes) and their hostility.’ The repetition of the art. before ἐκείνων would be more usual; but it is not necessary. The position of τε is defended by the contrast between ὑμῶν and ἐκείνων. λαμβάνειν is here ‘to feel about’ a thing. (Stahl and Classen agree in this explanation, which is no doubt correct.) For λαμβάνειν, ‘to feel about’ in a certain manner, cf. δι’ οἴκτου λ. (Eur. Suppl. 194), and c. 59, 1.

§ 4 l. 15. ἡμεῖς—sc. ἡμεν, as the sense shows.

16. μείζονι—viz. than you now are, from the Athenians.

§ 5 l. 23. ἐν καιροῖς οἷς—i.e. ἐν οἷς, according to a common idiom, e.g. Dem. XIX. 342 ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς (ἐφ’) ἥσπερ νῦν ἐξουσίας . . μενεῖ. To ἐν καιροῖς, as to μείζω, the partic. must be supplied; cf. c. 30, 1: contrast c. 47, 5.

25. μᾶλλον—i.e. than now when their services are forgotten.

τὰ ξύμφορα . . αὐτοῖς—(‘arrange terms) which were to their own advantage in view of the invasion.’ πρὸς τὴν ἔ. belongs to ξύμφορα rather than to πράσσοντες: cf. II. 3 ἕκαστον ἐφαίνετο πρὸς τὰ παρόντα ξύμφορον ἔσεσθαι.

26. ἀσφαλείᾳ—‘securely,’ as in c. 82 ἀσφαλείᾳ δὲ τὸ ἐπιβουλεύεσθαι, ‘to make plans in security,’ Soph. OT. 51 ἀλλ’ ἀσφαλείᾳ τήνδ’ ἀνθρώπων πόλιν.

§ 6 l. 28. ὧν—partitive.

29. ἐπὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς—i.e. because we have again chosen τὸ ἀγαθόν (cf. δικαίως presently) rather than τὸ ἀσφαλές (cf. κερδαλέως).

§ 7 l. 34. τῶν ξυμμάχων τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς κτλ.—lit. ‘when, while feeling (ἔχουσι with ὑμῖν) lasting gratitude towards brave allies, what is perhaps (σου) your interest at the moment is also secured.' The chief emphasis is, of course, on the participial phrase, which states the permanent condition or test of the righteousness of pursuing one's own interest. (The conjecture ἔχουσι for mss. ἔχωσι, which cannot be satisfactorily explained, seems certain. For the dat. τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς depending on a dat. ἔχουσι cf. [Xen.] de Rep. Ath. 1 6 τοῖς ὁμοίοις σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἦν ἀγαθὰ 'for those like themselves.' It is impossible to find a subject for ἔχωσι, and Mr. Spratt's rendering of τὴν χάριν ἔχωσι 'command a recognition' is incorrect. That this passage, however, is completely restored by reading ἔχουσι, it would be rash to assume.)

57 § 1 l. 1. προσκέψασθε—as προ-σκοπεῖν always implies a look into the future, there is much to be said for the conjecture προσ-σκέψασθε 'consider besides' here, for advice to consider the future has already been given in the preceding chapter. But as the Spartan reputation for ἀνδραγαθία was based on the venerated institutions of Lysurgus, they might be supposed to be specially sensitive about the future of that.

2. ἀνδραγαθίας—a merit for which Dorians especially valued themselves: here and at c. 64, 1 "the point is the special Dorian claim to an aristocratic strain of feeling and conduct" (Neil: see above on c. 40, 4). Perhaps 'good breeding.'

4. μὴ τὰ εἰκότα—a neg. is not seldom placed before the article or preposition (οὐκ ἐν ὀλίγῳ).

6. ἐπαινούμενοι—viz. as models of ἀνδραγαθία.

οὐδ'—'no more than you.'

9. ἐπιγινῶναι—after γνῶσεσθε above, the ἐπι- can scarcely have its usual force, 'to decide further': the sense is probably merely 'to arrive at a decision.'

§ 2 l. 12. τοὺς μὲν πατέρας . . ὑμᾶς δέ—if you, whose fathers . . ' the first clause being subord. to the second. Generally δεινόν is followed by εἰ in such cases.

13. τὸν τρίποδα—i.e. on the bronze pedestal of three intertwined serpents that supported the gold tripod set up at Delphi from the tithe of the Persian spoils dedicated to the Pythian god. It stood close to the altar before the temple. The pedestal was taken by Constantine to Byzantium, and still exists, with the names of the states inscribed on the lower part of the spiral. The tripod was appropriated by the Phocians. (Herod. ix. 81, with Stein's notes.)

15. πανοικεσία—after πόλιν and Πλάταιαν this means (as Steup points out) ‘with all its houses,’ not ‘household and all’ as in II. 16.

§ 3 l. 16. τοῦτο—referring to what precedes.

18. ἀπωλλύμεθα—Plataea was burnt by Xerxes. The rendering ‘we were all but destroyed’ is borne out by other passages; e.g. Andoc. de Myst. § 41.

έν—as in κρίνεσθαι έν.

19. ἀγῶνας—‘hazards.’

20. τότε—referring to the siege of Plataea, τότε being frequently used of a well-known occasion.

§ 4 l. 22. περιεώσμεθα, ‘we are outcasts.’ πάντων is probably masc.; cf. έκ παντός τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ above.

24. ἀτιμώρητοι—‘unsuccoured.’

27. βέβαιοι—‘faithful.’

§ 1 l. 2. ξυμμαχικῶν—i.e. the gods by whom the oath to be true to the alliance was taken. 58

5. τήν τε δωρεάν . . πρέπει—‘and (we call on you) to ask in your turn the favour of them—that you do not kill men whom it disgraces you to kill.’ ἀντ-απαιτῆσαι means, in answer to the favour they have asked of you—viz. κτείνειν ἡμᾶς. To this explanation rather than ‘in return for our services,’ εἴ τι ἐπέισθητε and ἀντι αἰσχροῦς (χάριτος) point, and this is the natural force of ἀντι-, as in δρῶν ἀντιπάσχω χρηστά, and so on; cf. ἀντιλαβεῖν presently. The subj. of ἀνταπαιτῆσαι is ὑμᾶς, and αὐτοῖς means the Thebans. The μή after οὔς is because the rel. clause is subord. to an infin. In this series of four co-ordinate infin. clauses, the second and third have τε, the fourth has καί.

7. σώφρονα—from us, in contrast with αἰσχροῦς, from them.

8. κακίαν—‘ill-fame,’ character of κακοί, as e.g. in Soph. Ant. 924 quoted on c. 82, 8.

§ 2 l. 12. κατ’ ἀνάγκην—as explained in c. 55, 1.

§ 3 l. 13. ὥστε καὶ . . ποιοῦντες . . καὶ προνοοῦντες—this is not clearly expressed, for the first participial clause states what follows from the previous sentence; but καὶ προνοοῦντες κτλ. contains a new point (ἐκόντας . . προισχομένους), and should scarcely have been co-ordinated with ἀδεῖαν ποιοῦντες.

14. ποιούντες—supply ἡμῖν: it is not clear whether ἡμῶν is similarly to be supplied to προνοούντες.

16. νόμος, the unwritten law; cf. cc. 66, 67. Prisoners who had not surrendered voluntarily were often killed. Appeals to the νόμος ἄγραφος, πατριος νόμος, νόμιμα πάσης Ἑλλάδος are very frequent; and of course the Antigone is full of the ἄγραπτα κἀσφαλὴ θεῶν νόμιμα. In Xen. Mem. iv. 4, 19 Hippias defines the ἄγραφοι νόμοι as οἱ ἐν πάσῃ χώρᾳ κατὰ ταῦτα νομιζόμενοι.

§ 4 l. 22. ἑσθήμασι—robes burned as offerings, probably, and not worn by the officials. The plur., joined with νομίμοις and ἀπαρχάς in this connexion, is surely mentioned as part of the ἐναγίσματα. Plutarch in Aristides 21, giving an account of the ceremony as performed in his day, makes no mention of robes among the offerings; but the details may well have been modified by his time. On the contrary, he does say that the Provost wore a purple coat and carried a sword; but the present passage does not read like a ref. to that. That clothes were burnt as offerings to the dead is well known, e.g. Eur. Hec. 573.

24. ἐπιφέροντες—specially used of offerings to the dead; II. 34.

25. ξύμμαχοι . . γενομένοις—the object of the speaker is to emphasize the lasting effect of the old alliance and to say nothing of the alliance with Athens. ὀμαίχμοις is an old-fashioned word, perhaps intended to recall the old times.

§ 5 l. 32. αὐθένταις—as having sided with the Persians. Another old-fashioned word.

36. ἱερά τε . . ἀφαιρήσεσθε—there are three difficulties here:—(1) ἐρημοῦτε, present, among a series of futures. This can hardly be defended by passages in which a single pres. and fut. are combined, such as II. 44 οὐκ ὀλοφύρομαι μᾶλλον ἢ παραμυθίσσομαι. Stahl reads ἐρημοῦντες after Gölter; Steup proposes to leave the word out. If sound we must render 'you are making desolate.' (2) What is the constr. of τῶν . . κτισάντων? The natural answer is that it depends on ἀφαιρήσεσθε ('you will take from'), not on θυσίας. The objection, that the Plataeans will ex hypothesi be dead, is hardly serious, for τῶν . . κτισάντων includes the whole Plataean people of whom no small part was safe at Athens. Neither is there any need to render ἀφαιρήσεσθε 'you will deprive,' a sense that ἀφαιρούμαι nowhere has when the object is inanimate. (3) Is ἱερά or θυσίας the object of τῶν . . κτισάντων? My reason for preferring θυσίας is that θυσίας τὰς πατρίους must refer to commemorative sacrifices to the gods founded after the victory of Plataea: otherwise the Lac. could have no interest in them, and the speaker could not seek to influence them by such an argument. These sacrifices are to the gods, and they were offered on behalf of Greece—ὑπὲρ τῆς Ἑλλάδος (Plut. Arist. 20, 21): hence the last sentence duly accords with ἡλευθερώθησαν οἱ Ἕλληνες and ἐκράτησαν (οἱ Ἕλληνες). (The νόμιμα τῶν Ἑλλήνων are not in question here.)

37. ἐσσαμένων—this archaic form in place of ἐσαμένων has by far the best ms. authority, and perhaps is meant to accord with ὁμαίχμοις and αὐθένταις.

§ 1 l. 2. τάδε—the conduct deprecated in the last c., which 59 conduct is now summarized in οὔτε . . οὔτε.

7. οἴκτω σῶφρονι λαβόντας—‘regarding (the case) with prudent compassion.’ The point of σῶφρονι is given in ἀλλ’ . . ξυμπέσοι. The obj. of λαμβάνειν in this sense is omitted also in vi. 61.

9. ὥς . . ξυμπέσοι—the subj. of ξυμπέσοι—τὸ τῆς ξ.—is anticipated.

§ 2 l. 11. πρέπον—sc. ἐστί.

13. ὁμοβωμίους; not found elsewhere; ‘having the same altars’ may mean either ‘worshipped at the same altar,’ of several gods worshipped together, or ‘having like altars’ throughout Greece; hardly ‘whose altars are common to all worshippers.’ The second suits the context best.

14. θ’—this is a necessary addition, as the passage cannot make a fresh start at προφερόμενοι.

15. μὴ ἀμνημονεῖν—Cobet pronounced these words spurious: the only constr. they can fairly bear is with προφερόμενοι ὅρκους, but, as ἡμεῖς is the subj. of the other infins., this is awkward. (ᾠμοσαν would require fut. or aor. infin.: order and the addition of τῶν π. τάφων are against ἰκέται γιγνόμεθα.) τῶν π. τάφων is rendered ‘by . . tombs,’ but the gen. can hardly be so understood with ἰκέται, on which it directly depends.

16. ὑμῶν—emphatic.

19. τοῖς ἐχθίστοις—sc. to your dead (not to us). “The dead are implored to prevent the Pl., their best friends, being surrendered to the Theb., their worst enemies” (Widmann).

20. ἦ . . ἐν τῇδε—ἐν should not be made to apply to ἦ, as this kind of idiom (Aesch. Sept. 1032 μητρὸς ταλαίνης κάπο δυστήνου πατρός) is confined to poetry (Wilamowitz on Eur. HF. 237).

21. πράξαντες . . . κινδυνεύομεν—a compressed form of ἐπράξαμεν, νῦν δέ κτλ. For νῦν we might have expected the εἶτα of inconsistency.

§ 3 l. 22. ὅπερ δέ—the rel. clause qualifies πανόμενοι, for which we might have had ποιοῦντες.

24. λόγου τελευτᾶν—exepexegetic of ὅπερ. The gen. with τελευτᾶν again in c. 104. If you 'begin' with a gen., you may naturally 'end' with one.

25. μετ' αὐτοῦ—viz. τοῦ τελευτᾶν.

29. ἐς τὰ αὐτὰ καταστήσαντας—i.e. as we were before we capitulated.

30. τὸν ξυντυχόντα—'any that comes'; cf. ὁ τυχών.

§ 4 l. 35. ἰκέται ὄντες—'as suppliants.' The likeness of this peroration to the poignant appeals in Euripides should be noticed.

61 § 1 l. 2. καὶ αὐτοί—'they on their part'; i. 51, Xen. Hell. vii. 1, 7.

τὸ ἐρωτηθέν—cf. Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 23 τὸ ἐρωτώμενον ἀποκρίνεσθαι.

6. οὐδὲ ἡττιαμένων—best taken as agreeing with αὐτῶν, 'and moreover when they have not even been accused.' The alternative, neut. depending on ἀπολογία, 'of conduct that was far from being made a charge against them,' produces tautology with ὃν οὐδεὶς ἐμέμψατο. καὶ ἅμα adds something of special importance, often in Thuc.; Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 25 καὶ διὰ τὸ φιλεῖν αὐτὸν καὶ ἅμα ἐλπίδας ἔχων.

8. πρὸς μὲν τά—cf. c. 82 ἐπὶ δὲ τῷ. This is the ordinary order when a prep. occurs with ὁ μὲν or ὁ δέ, e.g. Isocr. ii. 18 ἵνα τὰς μὲν φείγωσι, πρὸς δὲ τὰς προθυμότερον ἔχωσιν.

10. κακία referring to the κατηγορία, δόξα to the ἀπολογία καὶ ἔπαινος of the Plat.: not ironical, as the schol., but the use noticed above, c. 58, 1. τούτων is masc.; cf. ἡμετέρα and οὔτοι below.

§ 2 l. 13. ἡμῶν—the Boeotian migration from Thessaly.

16. ξυμμείκτους—Pelasgians, Thracians, Hyantians (Strabo).

18. ἡγεμονεύεσθαι—i.e. to acknowledge the ἡγεμονία of Thebes in Boeotia.

20. προσηναγκάζοντο—an attempt to make them observe τὰ πάτρια. See c. 65, 2.

§ 2 l. 5. οὐ belongs to μηδίσαι.

6. Ἀθηναίους—attraction to case of αὐτούς.

ιδέα—‘method.’

§ 3 l. 8. καίτοι . . εἶδει—‘you must surely consider the conditions under which.’

10. ἐτύγχανεν . . πολιτεύουσα—‘was in point of fact’: τυγχάνω, as often, not of a mere accident, but of the true state of things, as distinct from what might appear to be.

11. ισόνομον—where all the nobles are equal, and their rights are fixed by laws. But in a δυναστεία the few rulers are a law to themselves.

13. τῷ σωφρονεστάτῳ—‘the best order,’ i.e. an aristocracy or moderate democracy. No doubt this is said with reference to the constitution of Thebes, as existing in 427 B.C., with its two Boeotarchs and four assemblies confined to τοῖς κεκτημένοις πληθὸς τι χρημάτων, as Theopompus or Cratippus says. (Several conjj. have been made on this unusual expression, e.g. τῷ σώφρονι πάντων Herw. : τῷ σωφρονεστέρῳ Hude.)

14. τυράννου—for τυραννίδος; so δῆμος for δημοκρατία.

§ 4 l. 15. οὗτοι . . σχήσειν—‘these in the hope of winning power for themselves in yet greater degree.’

§ 5 l. 21. γούν—‘thus for example’; illustrative of the previous statement.

23. ἐπιόντων τὴν τε ἄλλην Ἑλλάδα καὶ . . πειρωμένων—as τε cannot mean ‘and’ here, but must be correlative to καὶ, it is clear that ἐπιόντων governs τὴν . . Ἑλλάδα, and that the introduction of πειρωμένων changes the constr.; cf. cc. 67, 6, 94, 3 (so Steup).

26. ἐχόντων—after the battle of Oenophyta, 458 B.C. The battle of Coronea in 446 forced the A. to abandon Boeotia.

§ 1 l. 4. πάσης—‘any,’ inclusive, a common use of πᾶς and its derivative adverbs. 63

§ 2 l. 6. ἡμετέρα—objective; II. 42 τὴν τῶν ἐναντίων τιμωρίαν.

8. τὰ πρὸς ἡμᾶς—adverbial, ἵνα ἡμᾶς τιμωροῖσθε.

10. ὑπάρχον—sc. μὴ ξυνεπιέναι. γε gives a causal sense to a partic.

14. προβάλλεσθε—as a defence; cf. I. 37 τὸ εὐπρεπὲς ἄσπονδον προβάλληται.

γε—not a common use of γε, where it serves to connect, and at the same time throws feeling into the sentence: ‘Ah, yes.’

15. παρέχειν—sc. ὑμῖν.

§ 3 l. 19. δέ γε or δὲ . . γε is used to cap a previous statement or, while accepting it, to bring in a consideration on the other side; it is common in retort (Neil).

20. κατα-προδοῦναι—‘utterly to betray’: so prob. in καταδουλουμένους.

§ 4 l. 26. τοῖς δέ=ἐκείνοις δέ.

27. καίτοι . . ἀποδιδομένας—‘surely failure to return favours with like favours (cf. ἴσῃν above) is dishonourable; and not failure to return debts of gratitude that were justly incurred (cf. ὑμεῖς . . ἀδικούμενοι), but of which the payment leads to injustice’ (cf. τοῖς δὲ ἀδικούσιν). You should have waited till they were ἀδικούμενοι to return the service they had rendered to you.

64 § 1 l. 3. ὅτι . . τάναντία—‘because the A. did not either, and we did, from your wish’ etc. ἡμεῖς is much better than ὑμεῖς, giving antithesis to Ἀθηναῖοι, as in τοῖς μὲν . . τοῖς δέ: cf. c. 63, 3. βουλόμενοι applies to the Plat.

§ 2 l. 6. ἀπὸ τούτων—emphatic resumption of the attracted rel.

8. ξυναγωνίζεσθε—‘continue their allies,’ in mockery.

§ 3 l. 11. Αἰγινήτας—Aegina was reduced in 457 B.C. to the status of a tributary ally.

12. ἄλλους τινάς—thought to be the Euboeans, who had fought at Plataea, and against whom Pericles may have employed the Plat. in 445 B.C.

13. διεκωλύετε—sc. ἄλλους καταδουλοῦσθαι.

16. περιτειχίζεσθαι—‘before the siege was begun.’

17. ἡμῶν—‘on our side.’ This demand had been made by K. Archidamus, but the Theb. adopt it.

§ 4 l. 18. τοῖς Ἕλλησι—the dat. of agent with other parts than perf. of pass. is not uncommon in Thuc.

20. ἀνδραγαθίαν—in remaining true to Athens.

21. οὐ . . ἐπεδείξατε—‘you have now shown not to belong to your nature.’ Thuc. does not use ἐπιδεικνύναι in this sense elsewhere, but other authors, e.g. the orators, do. It is prob. unnecessary to read ἀπεδείξατε or ὑπεδείξατε. Steup renders ‘you showed afterwards.’

23. ἐξηλέγχθη ἐς τὸ ἀληθές—‘has been conclusively demonstrated.’

§ 2 l. 9. ἀδικοῦμεν—‘are guilty,’ as often.

11. κοινά—‘common to.’ Plataea had remained outside the Boeotian league as reconstituted in 446 B.C., and of course had no representatives in the General Assembly of the league which met at Thebes.

12. καταστήσαι—‘bring you into line with.’

§ 3 l. 16. πλείω παραβαλλόμενοι—they were οὐ τῶν ἀδυνατωτάτων (II. 3); cf. § 2. For the verb cf. c. 14, 1.

18. φιλίως, οὐ πολεμίως κομίσαντες—cf. the αὐτοί and πολέμιοι of § 2, and c. 66 οὐ πολεμίως ἐπράσσομεν which show that the adverbs cannot apply merely to the Plat. and mean ‘with friendly, and not hostile intent to their fellow-citizens’: but must refer to the Theb. For this reason, and because κομίσαντες lacks an obj., Steup reads φιλίους and πολεμίους. But ‘in a friendly manner’ implies here ‘us as friends of Plataea,’ and κομίζειν is used like δέχεσθαι. It is not necessary to have an obj. expressed: cf. ἐπεκαλέσαντο above. The rest of the sentence shows that there is an intentional vagueness in the terms chosen: it was ‘a friendly transaction.’

19. ὑμῶν—partitive, in unusual position; cf. c. 22, 5.

20. μηκέτι μᾶλλον γενέσθαι—χείρους and ἀμείνους have a political meaning here, and are scarcely felt as comparatives: hence μᾶλλον is natural; ‘should henceforth not get more so.’

21. σωφρονισταὶ . . οἰκειοῦντες—adopting Weil’s view that γνώμη and σωμάτων must be under the same governance, and that there must be a real antithesis between ἀλλοτριοῦντες and οἰκειοῦντες, tr. ‘seeking to regulate opinion and persons, not alienating their city (handing it over to strangers), but bringing it home to the union of their kinsmen’ (the Boeotian confederacy). It is usual to take τῶν σωμάτων with τὴν πόλιν, ‘not depriving the city of your persons’: this is very strange for τὰ σώματα τῆς πόλεως ἀλλοτριοῦντες. σωφρονισταὶ of the party opposed to extreme democracy; cf. c. 82, 8. (For the antithesis of σῶμα and γνώμη, Andoc. de Fide. 24.)

23. ἐχθροὺς . . ἐνσπόνδους—"sc. ὑμᾶς ; not breaking your peaceful relations with any state, e.g. Athens, but putting you in them on a footing with every other state, i.e. Thebes. Plataea was still, as they sophistically say, to enjoy the σπονδαί, but not on conditions peculiar to herself. ἀπασι depends on ὁμοίως" (Prof. Lamberton).

66 § 1 l. 2. προείπομέν τε κτλ.—the account corresponds very closely with the narrative of the attempt on Plataea in II. 2 f.

§ 2 l. 9. πλήθους—often used of the majority.

10. μήτε . . ἐξελθεῖν—explaining τὰ ὁμοῖα.

12. οὓς μὲν . . ἀλγοῦμεν—the sentence takes an unexpected turn: instead of τοὺς μὲν ἀπεκτείνετε we get a comment on that action. The rel. in each case is causal, = ὅτι τοὺς μὲν: cf. 1. 68 τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν, ὧν (= ἐπεὶ ἡμῶν) τοὺς μὲν . . , IV. 26 ἀθιμίαν δὲ πλείστην ὁ χρόνος παρέιχε, οὓς (= ὅτι αὐτοὺς) ᾤοντο ἐκπολιορκήσιν.

16. παρὰ νόμῳ—see c. 58, 3.

§ 3 l. 17. κἀνταῦθα—this emendation of καὶ ταῦτα seems necessary, since ταῦτα τρεῖς ἀδικίας for 'these as three wrongs' is unexampled.

19. λυθείσαν—for the constr. see on c. 53, 3.

21. κτείνειν—the pres. depends on the subst.: but the verb (ὑπισχροῦμαι) always has the fut.

25. αὐτῶν—αὐτά referring to what has been mentioned, as often.

67 § 1 l. 4. ἡμεῖς δέ—to supply εἰδῶμεν is grammatically necessary; 'that we may know after your condemnation that we have yet more rightly taken vengeance on them.' To εἶσι δσιώτερον we must surely supply ὑμῶν: you will act justly: we shall have acted yet more equitably. We are the parties chiefly aggrieved. But it is said (already by Bloomfield) that for εἰδῶμεν we need 'feel' or 'appear,' since the Theb. do not discover anything from their own speech: hence 1. φανῆτε for εἰδῆτε Rauchenstein; or 2. take εἰδῆτε as a zeugma: or 3. read ἡμᾶς . . τετιμωρημένους Kr. But notice (1) the speech would lead to condemnation by the judges: (2) the condemnation would show the Theb. that their action had been justified. The only alternative, I think, is to supply ᾤων, and to assume an assimilation of finite verb to the previous partic. clause, as Hude, who compares Xen. Mem. II. 3, 17.

§ 2 l. 6. ἀκούοντες—"by the account of." ἀκούων, like κλύων, is often used where we expect an aor. partic.

9. διπλασίας ζημίας—the influence of the rel. does not extend to this clause.

οὐκ ἐκ προσηκόντων—i.e. contrary to what was to be expected of them.

§ 3 l. 15. ὦν—see on c. 2, 1 l. 3.

17. οἱ δὲ . . . λελειμμένοι—‘others left behind in old age and their homes desolate.’ The emendation κατ’ οἰκίας or καὶ αἱ οἰκίαι, is necessary. The latter is better, because οἰκίαι ἐρῆμοι should certainly be co-ordinate with οἱ δέ, so as to correspond with τὴν σφετέραν ἐρημίαν.

§ 4 l. 21. τὰ ἐναντία—adverbial.

22. ἐπίχαρτοι—sc. ἀξιοί εἰσι.

§ 5 l. 25. δίκη κρίναντες together correspond to μίσει.

26. οὐκ ἀνταποδόντες—i.e. they will not have done so, because the penalty will be ἔννομα : whereas our suffering was ἄνομα (§ 6; cf. παρενόμησαν); the aor. partic. alluding to fut. perf. time as if the main verb were fut., cf. ἐκστρατευσάμενοι c. 102. (Various changes have been proposed: (1) to alter ἀνταποδόντες to fut., pres., or ἂν ἀνταποδόντες, or to read ἀνταποδόντες ἐς νῦν: (2) or, keeping ἀνταποδόντες, to start a new sentence at καὶ οὐκ, placing ἔννομα γάρ in parenthesis. It does not seem possible to separate the latter from πείσονται. It is best to suppose a slight break after κρίναντες, as though the rest were an afterthought.)

§ 6 l. 32. καὶ ἡμῖν—instead of a second obj. corresponding to καὶ τῷ νόμῳ, a new verb follows: cf. c. 71, 1.

33. ὦν πρόθυμοι γ.—see § 3.

34. τοῖς λόγοις—dat. of cause.

37. ὦν . . . ὄντων depends on ἀπαγγελία.

39. ἔπεσι—‘fine phrases,’ = ῥήμασι.

§ 7 l. 41. κεφαλαιώσαντες—for the point see c. 52, 4.

πρὸς τοὺς ξύμπαντας—‘with reference to all,’ i.e. (as Classen) ‘as a warning to all.’ A summary question followed by a decision will serve to check rhetorical defences. (Weil conjectures πρὸς τὸ ξύμπαν.)

42. ποιήσῃσθε—attraction to ὑμεῖς, as in I. 82 ὅσοι ὥσπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐπιβουλευόμεθα.

§ 1 l. 4. εἰ . . . πεπόνθασι is the ἐπερώτημα.

5. τὸν ἅλλον χρόνον—‘all along.’

6. δῆθεν—always ironical, signifying that this is not the true reason.

7. μετὰ τὸν Μῆδον—usually μετὰ τὰ Μηδικά.

8. καὶ (ἤξιουν) ὅτε . . οὐκ ἐδέξαντο—it is impossible to make grammar of the sentence with ὅτε . . ᾧ . . ὡς in. Each word has been altered: the removal of ᾧ seems most likely; 'and particularly, when afterwards the offer that they made of remaining neutral according to that convention was refused.'

10. ἡγούμενοι—this gives the reason for νομίζοντες . . ἐδέξαντο.

τῇ . . βουλήσει—'by their own just intention,' i.e. they had tried their best to conform to the σπονδαί: it was the fault of the Plat. that the Lac. have fair grounds for regarding the σπονδαί at an end.

12. τὸ αὐτό—obj. of ἐρωτῶντες, so that παραγαγόντες καὶ breaks the constr.; cf. Soph. Antig. 1279 τὰ δ' ἐν δόμοις | ζοικας ἦκειν καὶ τάχ' ὄψεσθαι κακά, where τὰ δ' ἐν ὁ. is governed by ὄψεσθαι.

§ 2 l. 20. ἡνδραπόδισαν—'sold as slaves.' From II. 78 we know that 110 women were among the besieged Plat. (all the others had found refuge at Athens) and that these were all slaves already.

§ 3 l. 21. Θηβαῖοι—removed by Classen, who maintained that the true subj. of ἔδοσαν is the Lac.; but cf. c. 58, ὃ εἰ . . χῶραν τὴν Πλαταιίδα Θηβαῖδα ποιήσετε. τὰ σφέτερα certainly seems to refer to the Thebans (cf. II. 2). (Herbst and Busolt defend the MS. reading.)

κατὰ στάσιν—the circumstances are unknown.

24. ἐκ τῶν θεμελίων—take with ῥυκδομήσαν.

25. πρὸς τῷ Ἡραίῳ—the site of the Heraeum and remains of the νεὸς λίθινος have in all probability been discovered (Am. J. of Archæcol. 1891). It is likely that the temple previously existing was pulled down and replaced by the new one mentioned here.

καταγώγιον—for those who came to worship at the temple: otherwise they would have had no shelter after the destruction of the city.

26. πανταχῇ is put with διακοσίων ποδῶν (200 ft. square) by some edd., but more prob. belongs to κύκλῳ = 'all round,' as in VII. 79.

27. οἰκήματα—for sleeping: they were in two stories.

29. τοῖς ἄλλοις—instrumental, with κατασκευάσαντες.

30. τείχει—i.e. inside the city. The sacred precinct lay 'before the city' (Herod. ix. 61).

§ 4 l. 34. καί—intensive.

37. ἄρτι τότε καθιστάμενον refers to the fall of Plat., not to the beginning of the siege. Cf. c. 3, 1.

§ 5 l. 39. τρίτῳ καὶ ἐνενηκοστῷ—519-427 B.C. But Grote showed that 509 B.C. was the probable year of the alliance; hence it has been suggested that ἐνενηκοστῷ is due to an early error in an uncial ms., and that Thuc. wrote the uncial signs for ὀγδοηκοστῷ.

40. ἐπειδή—cf. l. 6 οὐ πολλά ἔτη ἐπειδὴ πέπνυται.

§ 1 l. 3. τότε—see c. 33, 1.

4. ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηναίων—the other places in Thuc. in which ἐκ 'on the part of,' practically = ὑπό are l. 20, ii. 49, v. 104, vi. 36. The use is Ionic; not found in ordinary Attic prose.

6. σποράδες—correl. with the preceding partic., as in c. 82, 1 οὐκ ἂν ἐχόντων πρόφασιν οὐδ' ἐτοίμων παρακαλεῖν, but Classen points out that ἀπ' αὐτῆς σποράδες goes more closely with κατηνέχθησαν, and regards καί before ἀπ' as spurious.

8. Κυλλήνη—the port of the Eleans.

10. ξύμβουλον—because the ναύαρχος had shown his incompetence.

§ 2 l. 14. περὶ Ναύπακτον—see c. 7, 3.

15. πρὶν . . προφθάσωσι—the constr. is ὅπως δὲ προφθάσωσι (a second reason of the plan adopted), πρὶν . . , but for the sake of the antithesis between δώδεκα . . παρόντων and πλέον τι ἐπι. the order is changed.

§ 1 l. 2. ἦλθον αὐτοῖς—see on c. 5.

ἐκ τῶν . . ναυμαχιῶν—there were two battles fought near the islands called Sybota. 250 of the principal Corcyreans were taken prisoners in the second battle, and were conveyed to Corinth, where they remained about five years.

5. ὀκτακοσίῳν—the ransom for not more than 250 men is very high, but the prisoners were very important. The price paid for a man varied very much, of course, as it does still. The lowest heard of is two minas (Herod. v. 77), the highest—in the case of an ambassador of Philip—nine talents. The sum here mentioned need not be thought so great as to rouse suspicion.

5. τοῖς προξένοις—i.e. the Corinthian representatives of Coreyra had gone bail for them.

§ 2 l. 10. ἀφικομένης . . ἀγουσῶν—edd. say ἀγονσῶν must be plur. because both ships had πρέσβεις on board. Yet we find pred. in sing. applying to several subjects; I. 42, 1, IV. 31, 2, VI. 31, 1, VII. 44, 6, 58, 4. For the attraction cf. c. 72, 2.

11. καταστάντων—sc. τῶν πρέσβειων.

13. ξυγκείμενα—it was a defensive alliance only. πρότερον means before the convention with Athens, when Coreyra had been on good terms with the Pel., though not in alliance with any one.

§ 3 l. 14. ἦν γὰρ . . ὑπάγουσιν—the reason stated in advance in parenthesis; cf. c. 107, 3.

15. ἐθελοπρόξενος—only mentioned here; it prob. means that P. had not been appointed by Athens; and hence he could be prosecuted for his Athenian sympathies.

16. προειστήκει—unofficial leader.

§ 4 l. 20. χάρακας—'vine-poles,' Coreyra having many vineyards. The sites of the τεμένη are unknown. Alcinous is the Homeric king.

22. στατήρ—of silver, worth 2½ Attic drachmas, the only form of stater coined in Coreyra.

§ 5 l. 25. ταξάμενοι ἀποδώσιν—'pay by a mutual arrangement,' prob. on the instalment system.

§ 6 l. 27. τῷ τε νόμῳ ἐξείργοντο—nothing is to be supplied; 'the law forced them, allowed them no escape.' Cf. Herod. ix. 111 ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου ἐξεργόμενος.

29. τοὺς αὐτοὺς . . νομίζειν—i.e. to substitute a ξιμμαχία, offensive and defensive alliance, for the existing ἐπιμαχία.

34. τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης—sc. ὄντες.

71 § 1 l. 2. ταῦτα . . δουλωθεῖεν—for the position of the first καὶ see c. 67, 6. It is usual to supply from ταῦτα (i.e. what they had done) a οὕτως το ἥκιστ' ἂν δ.: better, I think, without; 'that it was not likely that they would be made slaves by the A.'

5 δέχεσθαι—the meaning of εἶπον passes into that of κελεύω.

ἀλλ' ἢ—VII. 50, 3.

μιᾷ νηὶ—cf. II. 7.

5. ἡσυχάζοντας applies to the Coreyreans.

§ 2 l. 10. ὥς—'as.' They were to put matters in a good light.

11. ἀνεπιτήδειον—to Corcyra.

12. ἐπιστροφή—lest 'notice' should be taken by Athens, resulting in some action against Corcyra. The πρέσβεις must have completely won over part of the refugee friends of Peithias to their side, since it was thought necessary to intern them in Aegina (B. Schmidt).

§ 1 l. 1. ἐλθόντων—sc. τῶν πρέσβεων. 72

3. ὅσους ἔπεισαν—sc. τῶν ἐκεῖ καταπεφευγόντων.

§ 3 l. 9. The accompanying map will explain the situation of the contending parties.

§ 1 l. 2. ὀλίγα—adverbial acc. like βραχεία and μέγала in c. 73 73
40, ἴσα in c. 14. The constr. is widely diffused in Thuc.

The appeal to the slaves is a most unusual feature, and shows the extreme bitterness of the strife.

5. πλῆθος—of the 'majority,' as often.

§ 1 l. 2. ἡμέρας—the day referred to in c. 73. 74

3. χωρίων—this word is specially used of strategic positions.

6. κεράμῳ—collective, as e.g. in II. 4. So κάλαμος II. 76; in Livy XXIII. 16 vallum ferre=vallos f.

§ 2 l. 8. δέισαντες—ingressive, 'becoming afraid.'

9. αὐτοβοεί—said to be an archaic word.

νεωρίου—in the Harbour of Alcinous.

12. ξυνοικίας—situated between the Agora and the Acropolis. The gen. adjj. that follow refer to both οἰκίας and ξυνοικίας. No doubt some of the ὀλίγοι had invested money in the tenements, and let them out, like the plutocrat pork-butcher in the Knights of Aristophanes.

15. ἐκινδύνευσε . . διαφθαρῆναι—cf. c. 40, 5.

§ 3 l. 17. ὥς ἐκάτεροι—'on either side,' an idiomatic phrase, to be taken with ἡσυχάσαντες, which is ingressive (A. G. Laird in Am. J. of Phil. 1906, p. 43).

§ 1 l. 1. Νικόστρατος—he had command of the Athenian squadron at Naupactus, from which he could reach Coreyra in a day. The Messenians had been settled in Naupactus after the Messenian Wars. 75

5. ἔπρασσε—conative.

6. δέκα—oligarchs.

§ 2 l. 11. οἱ τοῦ δήμου προστάται—a bronze plate found on the site of the Coreyrean Agora and now in the Brit. Mus. contains a decree of the Coreyrean Assembly (ἀλία) appointing an Athenian 'proxenus' of Coreyra. Among the Coreyrean authorities mentioned in the decree, which is assigned to the 4th cent. B.C., occurs προστάτας Γνάθιος. The προστάται therefore appear to have been a board of magistrates in Coreyra (Anc. Gr. Inscr. in the Brit. Mus. Pl. ii. p. 50).

16. ξυμπέμψειν—sc. ἔφασαν, by an idiom to which Thuc. is partial.

§ 3 l. 19. τὸ Διοσκόρων ἱερόν—the site is unknown.

§ 4 l. 23. τῇ τοῦ μὴ ξυμπλεῖν ἀπιστία—'by their distrust in sailing (i.e. in the proposal that they should sail) with them.' The μὴ is added because the whole result is neg., as often; cf. II. 49 ἡ ἀπορία τοῦ μὴ ἡσυχάζειν, Plato, Apol. 38 D ἀπορία τοῦ μὴ ἐθέλειν.

§ 5 l. 26. οἱ ἄλλοι—oligarchs, not confined to those who had refused to go on board the five ships.

27. τὸ Ἡραῖον—see the map, with notes. The removal from the shrine of Castor and Pollux to the Heraeum is to be accounted for by (1) supposing that the latter was the principal shrine of the city, and (2) the necessity of getting 400 men into the τέμενος. (Bloomfield's view that the Heraeum was superior in sanctity is fanciful.)

28. γίγνονται—of the sum-total, as often.

76 § 1 l. 2. τὴν . . διακομιδὴν—example of the liking Thuc. shows for a subst. derived from a verb.

4. Κυλλήνης—c. 69. For ἐφ' ὄρμῳ οὔσαι we say 'which haul lain at anchor' (at Cyllene), οὔσαι being imperf. partic. (MT. § 140). The mss. have ἐφορμοὶ for ἐφ' ὄρμῳ, but there seems to be no authority for ἐφορμος as adj.

8. ἐπέπλει—ἐπιπλεῖν is used of the commanders: ἐμπλεῖν below of the crew.

77 § 1 l. 1. πολλῷ θορύβῳ—the democratic authorities in Coreyra had received no warning of the approach of Alcidas. No organization for getting information of the movement of fleets existed.

§ 2 l. 12. τῶν ποιουμένων—not very common, for τῶν γιγνομένων.

§ 3 l. 16. Σαλαμινία καὶ Πάραλος—see c. 33, 2. They had been with Paches at Mytilene; but must have joined Nicostratus at Naupactus.

§ 1 l. 3. τὸ καθ' αὐτοὺς—τό is inserted in order to get a contrast between Coreyreans and Athenians. καθ' αὐτοὺς alone = 'by, or among, themselves.' 78

5. ἄθρόαις—with ταῖς . . τ. : the Athenians shrink from attacking the enemy thirty-three strong in the centre.

§ 2 l. 11. μὴ ὅπερ ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ γένοιτο—in 429 B.C. when the Athenian admiral Phormio with twenty ships gained a great success over forty-seven Peloponnesian ships by similar tactics. Then, too, the enemy had adopted a similar circular formation.

§ 3 l. 16. ὅτι μάλιστα with προκαταφυγεῖν, 'as much as possible.' It might be taken equally well with ἐβούλοντο, but the general sense of the passage favours the former.

ἐαυτῶν—cf. c. 13, 7.

§ 4 l. 19. τοιαύτη—cf. c. 97, 3. (Heitland's idea that there is some irony in τοιαύτη is quite groundless: ἦν δὲ οὐδεὶς κόσμος in c. 77 refers to only one incident in the battle.)

§ 1 l. 4. τοὺς ἐκ τῆς νήσου—see c. 75, 5. 79

§ 2 l. 8. κρατοῦντες—concessive.

§ 3 l. 13. ὄντας—see on cc. 2, 2; 80, 1.

15. Λευκίμην—at SE. of the island, still called Leukimo.

§ 1 l. 4. τοῖς ἄλλοις—the other ὀλίγοι besides the ίκέται. 80

6. ὅμως—in spite of the confusion.

§ 2 l. 8. μέχρι μέσου ἡμέρας—Thuc. generally uses μέσος as an adj., but Xen. often has μέσον as a noun.

9. ἀπέπλευσαν—to Sybota.

10. προσπλέουσai ἀπὸ Λευκάδος—no doubt the fleet was not yet past Leucas when the signal was given. It appears presently (c. 81, 1) that Alcidas feared to sail round the island lest he should be seen by the Athenians. (It is not necessary to construe ἀπὸ Λευκάδος with ἐφρυκτωρήθησαν, as many do. Alcidas could not know how far on its way from Leucas the Athenian fleet had got; and his fear was not wholly groundless.) This is the first mention of Eurymedon, who afterwards served in Sicily and was killed during the siege of Syracuse.

12. πυνθανόμενοι—'on hearing of the strife and of the intention.' Notice that the verb has a double constr. here. Commentators point out (1) that the Athenian fleet doubtless consisted to a large extent of ships returned from Lesbos : (2) that the news of the στάσις was carried to Athens by the ship mentioned in c. 70.

81 § 1 l. 1. τῆς νυκτός—‘that night.’

4. τὸν Λευκαδίων ἰσθμόν—the isthmus connected Leucas with the mainland : there is now an artificial channel.

§ 2 l. 8. λαβόντες—if genuine, best considered pleonastic (with Stahl), as we say ‘took and brought.’ Some think it a gloss on εἴ τινα λάβοιεν below. To supply τὴν πόλιν (with L. Herbst) is forced, and involves an artificial, and highly improbable, explanation of the meaning. See crit. note.

τοὺς Μεσσηνίους—see c. 75, 1.

10. περιπλεῦσαι—from the harbour of Alcinous. The oligarchs who had been induced to embark would now be separated from their comrades in the Heraeum and the agora.

11. ἐπλήρωσαν—c. 80, 1.

14. ἀπεχρῶντο—very rare in this sense ; cf. διαχρῆσθαι in c. 36.

§ 3 l. 19. τὰ γιγνόμενα—i.e. from the Heraeum on high ground they saw their comrades being led off to execution.

21. ὥς ἕκαστοι ἐδύναντο—the sing. might be expected, as in πάντες ἐφυγον ὅπῃ ἐδύνατο ἕκαστος (Xen.), but the distinction is not always kept up.

24. ἐφόνεον—rare word outside Herod., tragedy, and late writers.

25. τὴν μὲν αἰτίαν . . καταλύουσιν—‘bringing the charge on the subverters of the democracy,’ i.e. openly it was the oligarchs who were the object of their attack. (τὴν does not need explanation in the context after δίκην ὑποσχεῖν above. Only oligarchs—and they not in all cases—were put on their trial.)

26. ἀπέθανον δέ—transition from partic. to finite constr., as often ; II. 47 λεγόμενον μὲν . . ἐμνημονεύετο δέ, VII. 13 τῶν ναυτῶν μὲν ἀπολλυμένων, οἱ δὲ θεράποντες . . αὐτομολοῦσι, sc. τὰ χρήματα. Frequent throughout Gk.

28. ὑπὸ τῶν λαβόντων—‘by their debtors,’ with ἀπέθανον.

The Gk. justifies another way (Böhme), viz. with ὀφειλομένων, 'by those who caught them,' but the point is not so good.

§ 5 l. 28. πάσά τε ἰδέα κατέστη θανάτου—Virgil's et plurima mortis imago (Aen. II. 369); cf. Tac. II. III. 28 varia percussitium forma et omni imagine mortium.

30. καὶ ἔτι περαιτέρω—sc. οὐδενὸς ὅτου οὐ, i.e. παντός, but the gen. is habitually omitted. Demosth. XLV. 73 has δεινόν, ὡ γῇ καὶ θεοί, καὶ πέρα δεινοῦ.

§ 1 l. 1. ἡ στάσις (Krüger) is very probable, as the ref. is to a στάσις just described, but it is not absolutely necessary. 82

2. μᾶλλον—sc. ὡμῇ προχωρήσαι.

ἐν τοῖς πρώτῃν—see on c. 17, 1.

3. ὥς εἰπεῖν—qualifying a sweeping statement (never apologizing for a metaphor): 'I might almost say,' 'almost.'

4. τὸ Ἑλληνικόν—c. 57, 2.

6. ἐπάγεσθαι—"sense" constr., διαφορῶν οὐσῶν implying 'attempting.'

7. καὶ ἐν μὲν εἰρήνῃ . . ἐπορίζοντο—the transition from μὲν + partic. to δέ + finite verb here is considered perhaps the most extraordinary anacoluthon in Thuc. It is quite different from cases like c. 81, 4, since there is here no finite verb for the μὲν-clause. To put a comma only at Λακεδαιμονίους instead of the usual full stop helps to some degree. ἐτόλμων for ἐτοίμων (Vollgraff and Classen) is a conjecture worth notice.

8. ἐτοίμων—sc. ὄντων, an unusual ellipse except when the adj. + omitted partic. is supplementary to a verb, as in τετύχηκε τὸ ἐπιτήδευμα ἄλογον, sc. ὄν, I. 23.

9. αὐτοῦς—Athenians or Lac., as the case might be.

πολεμουμένων—masc. from πολεμῶω, of the Ath. and Lac. (to refer this to the two political parties is very strained).

καὶ ξυμμαχίας ἅμα . . αἱ ἐπαγωγαί—i.e. καὶ αἱ ἐπαγωγαὶ ἅμα ξυμμαχίας. The point of καὶ ἅμα is that parties no longer carried on their rivalry amongst themselves at home, but readily called in the help of allies too. ἐπαγωγαί is 'opportunities for calling in.' ἐκατέροις is ambiguous: it may be (1) by the Ath. and Lac., agent to ἐπορίζοντο, or (2) to either party in a state: then τοῖς . . βουλομένοις will be in limiting apposition to it. In either case τοῖς . . βουλομένοις is probably not dat. of agent.

10. τῇ . . προσποιήσῃ—the two ideas are parts of one whole, so that one art. suffices. The dat. is that of motive, esp. common in Thuc., mostly with single words such as φιλία, ἐχθεὶ, εὐνοία. Thompson, At. Syn. p. 150. σφίσιν αὐτοῖς is governed by προσποιήσῃ, ib. p. 155. The whole sentence has the appearance of a series of notes that have not been put into their final form.

16. μᾶλλον . . διηλλαγμένα—i.e. varying in intensity and in form: μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἡσυχαιτέρα form the first idea, adv. and adj. being combined, as either is possible separately with γίνεται. μᾶλλον καὶ ἡσυχαιτέρα γίνεται might also mean 'it rises and falls in intensity' on any given occasion, but the emphatic position of γιννόμενα shows that it corresponds in sense to the emphatic ἐστι, not to the mere copula ἐστὶ.

17. ὥς ἂν—'according as.'

18. ἐφιστῶνται—'impose themselves,' like a doom: κῆρες ἐφεστᾶσιν II. XII. 326, Soph. OT. 776. Eur. Hipp. 819.

22. τοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν—some think that βίον has fallen out before βιαίον, and certainly τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν is odd; but cf. τὸ παρόν and τὰ παρόντα.

24. ὀργάς—'dispositions.'

§ 3 l. 24. ἐστασίαζέ τε κτλ.—this passage down to the end of c. 83 is severely criticized by Dionysius Hal. de Thuc. iud. cc. 29 f. for its artificial and far-fetched expressions.

25. τὰ ἐφυστερίζοντά που—'the later cases,' the cities that followed the example of discord set by others; a strange expression, as Dionysius says, but occasioned by τὰ τῶν πόλεων. Notice that που=ἐν τινι πόλει.

26. πολὺ ἐπέφερε—'brought on much,' i.e. carried much further.

27. διανοίας—'plans.'

τῶν . . ἀτοπίᾳ—lit. 'through extreme ingenuity in their enterprises and strangeness in their revenges.'

§ 4 l. 29. ἀξίωσιν belongs to ἐς τὰ ἔργα, 'in relation to facts,' as well as to ὀρουάτων. It is not necessary to repeat the art. before ἐς because ἀξίωσις has another qualifying word.

30. τῇ δικαιώσει—by the arbitrary construction they put on them.

35. τὸ δ' ἐμπλήκτως ὀξύ—'impulsive rashness': cf. Plutarch, Eum. 3 ἐμπληκτον καὶ φορᾶς μεστὸν ὀξείας.

ἀνδρὸς μοίρα προστετέθη—'was ascribed, or set down, to the part of a man.'

36. ἀσφαλεία δὲ . . . εὐλογος—this appears to have been obscure already to Dionysius, who, while commenting on what precedes and what follows, discreetly leaves this alone. The usual explanation is as follows: (1) ἀσφαλεία is dat. of manner, in contrast with ἐμπλήκτως; (2) τὸ ἐπιβουλεύσασθαι = 'reconsideration,' or 'further reflexion'; (3) the verb to be supplied is ἐνομίσθη. Each of these suppositions is surprising. ἀποτροπή = 'evasion.' It has been proposed to supply προστετέθη (with Herbst and Fr. Müller) and to take ἀποτροπῆς π. εὐλογος as apposition to τὸ ἐπιβουλεύσασθαι. We should then transl. 'to form a hostile design was regarded as a measure of self-defence, (being) the specious pretence of fending off enmity.'

39. ἐπιβουλεύσας . . . τυχών—'if one had succeeded in a plot.'

40. δεινότερος—of ability.

41. αὐτῶν—viz. τοῦ ἐπιβουλεύειν καὶ ὑπονοεῖν.

44. ἐπικελεύσας—sc. κακὸν τι ὄρᾶν. ἐπικελεύω 'to encourage,' of an authority, has dat.; here κελεύω sets the constr. and ἐπι- is intensive.

45. τοῦ ἐταιρικοῦ—'the tie of party.' To this ἐτοιμότερον refers.

48. ὠφελία—'to render help'; cf. the principle συγγνώμη ἀδελφῷ βοηθεῖν. This seems more likely than the usual explanation 'for the public advantage.'

ξύνοδοι—of political meetings, a word of sinister meaning in the political life of Gk. states, suggesting intrigue and treason. The verb is ἐγένοντο and had Thuc. written ὠφελίας ἵνεκα and πλεονεξίας above, all would have been clear.

49. ἐς σφᾶς αὐτοῦς = ἐς ἀλλήλους, a common use.

50. τῷ θεῷ νόμῳ—i.e. it was not the oaths witnessed by the gods—θεῶν ὅρκοι—that bound them when they exchanged pledges. Cf., for example, Eur. Med. 21 βοᾷ μὲν ὅρκους, ἀνακαλεῖ δὲ δεξιάς. πίστιν μεγίστην, καὶ θεοὺς μαρτύρεται, and the celebrated passage in the same play, 439 βέβακε δ' ὅρκων χάρις, οὐδ' ἔτ' αἰδῶς Ἑλλάδι τῇ μεγάληα μένει, with Verrall's notes.

§ 71. 51. τά τε ἀπὸ τῶν ἐναντίων κτλ.—the sense (says Prof. Lamberton) is, 'when fair proposals were made by the adversary, the other party, when they had the advantage of superiority, would receive them not in a spirit of generosity, but only with practical precautions.' Thus οἱ ἐνδεχόμενοι, not οἱ ἐναντίοι, is the subject of προύχουσιν. This is surely correct, though the passage is usually taken as if οἱ ἐναντίοι denoted the stronger party, and the subject of ἐνεδέχοντο were 'the weaker.' The right version is given by Herbst, who says "How can it be supposed that from the party that had the upper hand at the moment proposals should emanate that were generous to the weaker side, and how can any one conceive that generosity (γενναϊότης) should lead the weaker side to accept them?" For ἔργων φυλακῇ cf. c. 46, 4.

56. ὅρκοι . . ξυναλλαγῆς—'oaths to confirm a reconciliation'; cf. Andocides, de Myst. 103 διηλλάγητε καὶ ὅρκους ὠμόσατε.

57. πρὸς τὸ ἄπορον ἔ. διδόμενοι—'as they were administered to either side only to meet an emergency.' It is surely unnecessary to regard ἐκατέρῳ as dat. of agent, as is usually done. οὐκ ἐχόντων applies to those who took the oaths tendered—i.e. it applies by sense to ἐκατέρῳ—and explains πρὸς τὸ ἄπορον. ὅρκον δίδωμι generally means 'I administer an oath,' but in Eur. Hipp. 735 'I take an oath.' The ordinary meaning gives an equally good sense here.

58. ἐν δὲ τῷ παρατυχόντι—'when a chance occurred.'

59. ὁ φθάσας θαρσῆσαι—see MT. 903. 8, where grave doubts are raised as to the possibility of the infin. with φθάνω in place of the ordinary partic. As φθάσας θαρσῆσας is intolerable, it is best to give the text as it stands, leaving the point undecided. The paraphrase of Dionysius is worth notice: εἰ δέ ποιν παρατύχοι τινὶ καιρὸς καὶ μάθοι τὸν ἐχθρὸν ἀφύλακτον, ἥδιον ἐτιμωρεῖτο ὅτι πιστεύσαντι μᾶλλον ἐπέθετο ἢ φιλαττουμένῳ. διὰ τὴν πίστιν applies to the enemy, as having confidence in the oath. ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς = 'than when he attacked openly,' giving the other side a fair chance.

63. ῥᾶον δ' οἱ πολλοὶ . . ἀγαθοί—'most men are more readily called clever if they are knaves than good if they are ignorant.' Another way of taking this is: 'most men prefer to be called clever knaves rather than honest fools.' The Gk. favours the first, the connexion with the previous sentence the second. To make the latter way easier Steup brackets ὄντες.

§ 8 l. 66. πάντων δ' αὐτῶν αἴτιον—'the cause of all that was office (i.e. the desire of office), resting on covetousness and ambition.'

67. ἐκ δ' αὐτῶν—viz. πλεονεξίας καὶ φιλοτιμίας.

68. καθισταμένων—masc., 'when men were settling down to.' The καί belongs, not merely to ἐς τὸ φιλονικεῖν, but to the whole phrase to π. ὅθυμον.

70. πλήθους . . σώφρονος—these are the fine names that were used for δημοκρατία and ὀλιγαρχία. ἰσονομία was a catch-word with democrats, σωφροσύνη with aristocrats.

73. ἄθλα—this suggests several of the words that follow—ἀγωνιζόμενοι, περιγενέσθαι, ἐπεξῆσαν (the last unusual with object)—the general idea being that of a desperate struggle between enemies. (Very like is Xen. Cyr. II. 2, 18-19.)

76. ἔτι μείζους—as compared with the τολμήματα.

77. προστιθέντες—from Dionysius, in place of προτιθέντες of the MSS., for 'to threaten' hardly suits with what precedes.

79. ψήφου ἀδίκου—best taken as subjective gen. depending on καταγνώσεως.

χειρί—the contrast is between force and the forms of law.

82. ἐνόμιζον—with dat., as χρῆσθαι.

εὐπρέπεια δὲ λόγου—since εὐσέβεια and λόγου εὐπρέπεια are not a proper contrast, many suppose that the contrast to the former is to be found in ἐπιφθόνως τι, and consequently attach εὐπρέπεια δὲ λόγου to the rel. sentence, 'those who managed to hide some malicious act under fair words.' But the μέν . . δέ contrast is not between single words, but between the two sentences as a whole: εὐσέβεια is 'a name for piety,' as e.g. in Soph. Ant. 921 τὴν δυσσεβειαν ('reputation of being δυσσεβής') εὐσεβοῦς ἐκτησάμην, 'on this pretence, covering an odious act, earned a better reputation.' Thuc. not seldom puts two similar words (εὐσέβεια—εὐπρέπεια) in contrast that do not really form an antithesis.

84. τὰ δὲ μέσα τῶν πολιτῶν—for the moderate element and the preference given to it by so many thinking men cf. Eur. Suppl. 244 τριῶν δὲ μοιρῶν ἥ ἑνὶ μέσῳ σφάζει πόλεις.

§ 1 l. 2. τὸ εὖηθες—in the earliest, good sense of the word, 83 according to its etymology (Plato, Rep. 400 E).

3. πλείστον μετέχει—in which nobility of character is the chief element.' Or, less probably, 'which is a very important element of a noble mind.' Cf. I. 84, 3.

6. ἐπὶ πολὺ διήνεγκεν — 'gained the upper hand.' ἐπὶ πολὺ of space, 'far and near.'

§ 2 l. 7. ὁ διαλύσων κτλ. — 'there was nothing to . . neither.' The fut. partic. as in Aesch. P.V. 27 ὁ λωφήσων γὰρ οὐ πέφυκέ πω. (Steup is mistaken in supposing that ἦν must be the copula in our sentence, if ὁ διαλύσων is taken as above.)

8. κρείσσους . . βεβαίου — the best way of taking this is as follows: (1) all men when they had the upper hand, by reflecting on the hopelessness of security took precaution rather against attack than were capable of trust in others.' Thus λογισμῷ . . βεβαίου is to be taken together and refers to προσκόπουν. But two other versions must be noticed: (2) 'finding more strength in calculation against the unexpected than in pledges.' Then τοῦ βεβαίου = ἡ τῷ βεβαίῳ. (3) 'Being more inclined in their calculations to despair of security' (or 'than to security'). The last seems an impossible version of κρείσσους ὄντες. The passage prob. repeats the thought of c. 82, 7.

§ 3 l. 11. γνώμην — 'understanding.'

14. ἐκ τοῦ πολυτρόπου — 'in consequence of their' — resemblance to Odysseus.

15. φθάνωσι προεπιβουλευόμενοι — Gildersleeve is surely right in reading φθάνωσι here, in accordance with the law that φθάνω ποιῶν and ἔφθασα ποιήσας are the correct forms.

§ 4 l. 17. καταφρονούντες — causal. For the constr. cf. Xen. Hell. IV. 5, 12 κατεφρονούν μηδένα ἂν ἐπιχειρήσαι.

84 [The external grounds for regarding this chap. as spurious are these. (1) In cod. F it is obelized: (2) a scholium says that none of the commentators thought it genuine: all found it obscure in style and strange in thought: (3) Dionysius (time of Augustus), who says a great deal about cc. 81-82, and transcribes to the end of c. 83, does not mention this c.: the inference may be that he did not find it in his MS.: (4) there are very few scholia on the chapter. On the other hand it is certain that Dio Cassius, who wrote late in the 2nd cent. A.D., knew it. The citations from Josephus (fl. 70 A.D.) are not sufficient to prove that he knew the passage. If, then, this is an imitation, it must have been written before the end of the 2nd cent., and perhaps not before the reign of Augustus. The internal evidence is hardly decisive. If this is the work of an imitator, it is a remarkably skillful production: but I think that any attentive reader of Dionysius, Josephus and Dio Cassius—not to mention Procopius—would hesitate to say that a scholar of the 1st or 2nd cent. A.D. could not have produced it. The most suspicious part is, I think, from οὐ γὰρ ἂν (§ 2 onwards. In the earlier part ὑπὸ τῶν τὴν τιμωρίαν παρασχόντων, διὰ πάθους . . ἔχειν, and καὶ παρὰ τοὺς νόμους ἀδικεῖν are strange. The first sentence as regards constr. is, perhaps, merely a little corrupt. The weight of opinion among modern critics is against the c. ; but the question cannot be decided.]

2. προτολμήθη—προ- denotes before the rest of Greece.

καὶ ὅποσα κτλ.—the καὶ is probably answered by οἱ τε μὴ κτλ. below. The first clause requires ἂν, which has perhaps fallen out either after ὅποσα or δράσειαν.

4. ὑπὸ τῶν . . παρασχόντων with ἀρχόμενοι. Hitherto they have been ruled oppressively by those who now give opportunity for revenge. Instead of παρασχόντων something like ἥδη παρεχόντων seems required. The oligarchs are meant.

7. διὰ πάθους . . ἔχειν—there has been much discussion of these words. τινες and μάλιστα δ' seem to show that διὰ πάθους must be intended as a contrast to πενίας . . ἀπαλλαξείοντες, passion versus sheer poverty. But πάθος = 'emotion' or 'passion' occurs nowhere else before Aristotle: in Thuc. it = 'a disaster.' (To take τὰ τῶν πέλας as equivalent to τοὺς πέλας, and διὰ πάθους ἔχειν like δι' ὀργῆς ἔχειν does not get over the difficulty, and does not yield a proper contrast.)

8. ἐπὶ πλεονεξίᾳ—i.e. prompted by oppression, poverty or downright passion.

9. ἀπὸ ἴσου—'on equal terms' with their adversaries already. Only here in Thuc. in place of ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου.

11. ἐπέλθοιεν—sc. ἂν from the previous sentences. The omission is rather awkward and unusual in so long a sentence. ὡμῶς and ἀπαραιτήτως only here in Thuc.

§ 2 l. 12. ἐς τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον—'at this crisis,' like ἐς μίαν ἡμέραν in VI. 16, Aristoph. Pax 366 εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν :

14. καὶ παρὰ τοὺς νόμους ἀδικεῖν—cf. c. 82. 6 παρὰ τοῖς κατεστῶτας (νόμοις). As Stahl says, we expect κρατήσασα after τοὺς νόμους, 'even when the laws are generally respected.' Steup suggests the loss of πρὶν after καί but Dio Cass. knew the passage as it stands.

15. ἐδήλωσεν . . οὐσα—οἷ. of δηλῶ replaced by the partic., as often ; cf. I. 21 ὁ πόλεμος δηλώσει μείζων γεγενημένος.

16. τοῦ προύχοντος—neut.

19. ἐν ᾧ—lit. 'in a case in which,' amounting to εἰ. Cf. II. 35 χαλεπὸν τὸ μετρίως εἰπεῖν ἐν ᾧ μῶλις καὶ ἡ δόκησις τῆς ἀληθείας βεβαιούται.

§ 3 l. 20. ἀξιούσιν τε κτλ.—the sense is clearly given by Arnold thus: Men in their violence set the example of doing away with those common laws of humanity which all parties alike might have appealed to in their adversity, and by their own previous conduct put themselves out of the pale of those laws, when they themselves might have occasion to solicit their protection. By the κοινὸι νόμοι the κοινὸς νόμος ὁ κατὰ φύσιν, as Aristotle (Rhet. I. 13) calls it, is of course meant. See n. on c. 58, 3. Plato in the Laws (p. 793) says these observances are the δεσμοὶ πάσης πολιτείας.

24. ὑπολείπεσθαι—middle.

85 § 1 l. 2. ταῖς πρώταις foreshadows the further disturbances, described in book IV., which occurred when Eurymedon returned.

§ 2 l. 6. διεσώθησαν—aor. as plup., a common idiom in parenthesis.

7. τεύχεα—built by Coreyra to protect its territory on the mainland against the neighbouring tribes, Chaones and Thesprotians.

10. ἐλίζοντο—viz. the fertile central part of the island, ἐξεργασμένη παγκάλως καὶ πεφυτευμένη χώρα, as Xenophon calls it (Hell. VI. 2, 6).

§ 3 l. 14. ὕστερον χρόνῳ—always of a considerable interval. It is most probable that the crossing occurred in the spring of 426 B.C.

§ 4 l. 19. τὴν Ἰστώνην—in IV. 46 we have ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῆς Ἰστώνης. It has been made highly probable (by B. Schmidt) that Istone is the whole mountain-range in the N.E. of Coreyra. It is possible that the name belonged also to a particular height in the range.

86 § 1 l. 2. ἐς Σικελίαν—this is the first intervention of Athens in Sicily. Under Pericles (who had died in the autumn of 429 B.C.), Athens had concluded alliances with Leontini and Rhegium in 433 B.C., perhaps also—though we have no direct evidence—with Naxos and Catana. But the idea of conquest in Sicily (§ 4) was entirely outside the policy of Pericles. See Introd. p. xxiii.

3. Λάχητα—the first mention of this well-known man. See c. 115. He was a supporter of Nicias in arranging the peace of 421. Plato's Laches is named after him. He is the dog Labes in Aristoph. Wasps. He was attacked by Cleon. He was killed at the battle of Mantinea, 418 B.C.

7. πλὴν Καμαριναίων—Camarina, founded circa 600 B.C. from Syracuse, was dependent on the mother-city, revolted in 553 B.C. and was destroyed. In 492 B.C. it was restored by Hippocrates, tyrant of Gela, but shortly afterwards was again involved in war with Syracuse, and was again destroyed. Its third building occurred circa 460 B.C.

9. τὸ πρῶτον emphasizes ἀρχομένου.

12. Χαλκιδικαί—Naxos, Catana, Himera. They are so called because their origin was Chalcis in Euboea.

13. Ἰταλίας in the confined sense that it bears in Greek authors, the modern Calabria, the peninsula reaching to the Laus on W. and to Metapontum on E.: ἀπὸ ἄκρας Ἰαπυγίας μέχρι πορθμοῦ Σικελικοῦ is the definition of Dionysius.

14. κατὰ τὸ ξυγγενές—Rhegium, too, was Chalcidian.

§ 3 l. 15. πέμψαντες—this is the famous embassy that was headed by Gorgias of Leontini. The reticence of Thuc. on the matter is characteristic.

16. παλαιὰν ξυμμαχίαν—the only alliance we know of is that of 433 B.C., but six years seems too short a time to be denoted by παλαιός. Hence it is assumed that an earlier alliance existed. But some have thought that Thuc. wished to obscure the fact that Pericles was responsible for the alliance with Leontini, in order to make it appear that Pericles was in no sense responsible for the intervention in Sicily.

§ 4 l. 21. βουλόμενοι δὲ μήτε . . . πρόπειράν τε ποιούμενοι—to make the sentence quite symmetrical, ποιέσθαι should have been written in place of ποιούμενοι.

23. δυνατὰ εἶη—personal constr.

§ 5 l. 24. καταστάντες—i.e. they chose Rhegium as their base.

§ 1 l. 2. ἐκλιπούσα μὲν . . . ἐγένετο δέ—c. 81. 4.

3. τὸ παντάπασιν—this curious phrase, occurring only here, is to be compared with τὸ παράπαν.

§ 2 l. 7. μᾶλλον ἐκάκωσε—no doubt this passage was written before the disastrous Sicilian Expedition of 415 B.C.

§ 3 l. 9. ἐκ τῶν τάξεων—i.e. ἐκ καταλόγων, from those liable to serve as hoplites, those of the three higher (Solonian) classes who were on the lists. Men were liable to ordinary service between the ages of 20 and 50. The fourth class—θῆτες—served only in the fleet; these with μέτοικοι and δοῦλοι are included in ὁ ἄλλος ὄχλος. The number of the hoplites on the lists at the beginning of the war was about 15,500. The cavalry numbered 1000.

14. Βοιωτίῳ—the other was in Arcadia.

88 § 1 l. 3. στρατεύουσιν ἐπὶ τὰς Αἰόλου νήσους—as this affair is one of the λόγον μάλιστα ἄξια c. 90. 1 we can see how insignificant were the incidents left unrecorded.

4. καλουμένας—second attribute, hence the order; c. 54, 5.

§ 2 l. 6. νέμονται—the word is used of enjoyment of profits derived, which may or may not be combined with occupation.

§ 3 l. 11. ἐν τῇ Ἱερᾷ—still called Vulcano. The coins of Lipara show Hephaestus seated, with a hammer. The group of islands, seven in all, is still called Liparian or Aeolian. The full name seems to have been Ἱερὰ Ἥφαιστων—Vulcani nomine sacra it is called in the Actae. Στρογγύλη, now Stromboli, is there described as enī nomen facies dedit ipsa Rotunda.

ὥς—very unusual constr. with νομίζω.

89 § 3 l. 15. Ἀταλάντην—Talantonisi: it had been fortified by the Athenians in order that they might prevent the injury caused to Euboea by piratical craft sailing out of Opus and the neighbourhood.

17. τοῦ τε φρουρίου—at the beginning of the war Athens had 2,500 men in such permanent garrisons in and out of Attica (Aristot. Ath. Pol. c. 24).

§ 5 l. 23. αὔτιον in apposition to the sentence, 'as for the cause of such an occurrence.' Cf. l. 23 τὴν ἀληθεστάτην πρόφασιν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἡγοῦμαι . . ἀναγκάσαι (αὐτοῖς) ἐς τὸν πόλεμον. The great earthquake at Messina has afforded a striking illustration of this chapter.

25. ἀποστέλλειν—the subject of this and of ποιεῖν is τὸν σεισμόν. The MSS. give ἐπισπωμένην, but either ἐπισπωμένων ἐπιπλ. or ἐπισπωμένης (pass., sc. τῆς θαλάσσης) seems necessary. βιαιότερον is best regarded as fem., as in δυσσεσβολέτατος ἡ

Λωκρίς c. 103, unless, indeed, in a confused passage, βιαιοτέραν should be read.

27. ἄν with ξυμβῆναι.

§ 1 l. 1. καὶ ἄλλοι—it is impossible to explain these words with certainty. The reference appears to be to the Sicels, but it is a strange way of designating them. καὶ ἄλλα is read by some, but (1) it is doubtful if ἄλλα ἐπολέμουν is a possible constr., and (2) even so, the change of subject in the antithetic clause—ἃ δὲ μάλιστα ἄξια κτλ.—is surprising. It is clear that Thuc. felt little interest in the affairs of Sicily in this year. The capture of Messina was the only important event.

§ 3 l. 17. ἑρύματι = φρουρίῳ.

§ 4 l. 20. οἱ Μεσσηνιοί—strangely placed in the middle of the gen. abs., but the order is not without parallel. Messina commands the strait between Sicily and Italy, and was therefore a valuable acquisition.

22. πιστὰ παρασχόμενοι ‘giving trustworthy assurances.’ πιστά is to be taken as pred., not as substantive.

§ 1 l. 2. περὶ Πελοπόννησον—see on c. 3, 3.

3. Δημοσθένης—the first mention of this celebrated general, conspicuous for boldness and enterprise. There is no doubt that Thuc. obtained from him much information about the expeditions in which he was a leading figure.

6. Νικίας—c. 51.

§ 2 l. 7. Μηλίους—Melos, like Thera, had, as a Lacedaemonian colony, held aloof from the Athenian alliance. But they had taken no part in the war. It is known that Thera now submitted.

8. αὐτῶν—it is hardly necessary to read αὐτῶν here. Cf. Xen. Cyr. I. 1, 5 ἐδυνάσθη ἐπιθυμίαν ἐμβαλεῖν τοῦ αὐτῷ χαρίζεσθαι.

§ 3 l. 12. ἐς Ὠρωπὸν τῆς Γραϊκῆς—on the borders of Attica and Boeotia. It belonged to Athens. For τῆς Γραϊκῆς cf. II. 23 τὴν γῆν τὴν Γραϊκὴν καλονμένην. The name belonged to the coast opposite Eretria. In II. 23 it is corrupted into Πειραϊκὴν.

13. οἱ ὀπλίται ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν—prob. to be taken together in spite of the absence of art. before ἀπὸ. In II. 80 we have τὸ ναυτικὸν ἐκ . . . , and in II. 18 κατὰ τὴν ἄλλην πορείαν ἢ σχολαϊότης.

16. Ἰππονίκου τοῦ Καλλίου — son of that Callias who negotiated peace with Persia in 470 B.C. The family was reputed the richest in Greece. The younger Callias, son of Hipponicus, was a very well-known man. Hipponicus was proexenus of Sparta. He fell at the battle of Delium, 424 B.C.

§ 5 l. 19. ἐν τῇ Τανάγρα — i.e. in the neighbourhood of Tanagra.

20. τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ μάχῃ — to be taken separately. τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ having ἡμέρα supplied. Herbst, who investigated the use of the phrase, came finally to the conclusion that alone it means 'on the next day,' but that sometimes a subst. is supplied from what precedes, in I. 44 ἐκκλησίᾳ, in VII. 11 μάχῃ.

92 § 1 l. 2. Ἡράκλειαν — the importance of this undertaking (see § 4 and c. 93, 1) seems to lie in the fact that it marks an extension of the area of the war by Sparta, a counter-move prompted no doubt by the operations of Nicias on the Loerian coast. Sparta could not match Athens at sea and little more was to be gained by invasions of Attica (cc. 1, 26) even if they were not prevented by exceptional events (c. 89).

§ 2 l. 8. προσθεῖναι — the verb is used of bringing into permanent relationship, whether as friend or foe or dependent: so πρόσκειμαι.

§ 3 l. 12. μητρόπολις — from this region the Dorians were sprung. A fragment of Tyrtaeus says of them: προλιπόντες Ερινεὸν ἡνεμόεντα | εὐρείαν Ἰέλοπος νῆσον ἀφικόμεθα.

§ 4 l. 19. καθίστασθαι — notice the pres. and contrast I. 36 καλῶς κεῖται of Coreyra) τοῦ παράπλου (the voyage to Sicily. quod fit non est, sed erit, says Stahl. The gen. τοῦ πολέμου depends on the phrase, on the analogy of χρησίμως. καλῶς ἔχει, ὡς ἔχει etc. ἡ πόλις is, of course, the colony to be.

21. τῆς ἐπὶ Θράκης παρόδου — it was from Heraclea that Brasidas started on his dash through Thessaly, to the great injury of Athens in Chalcidice (τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης).

22. τό τε ξύμπαν — summing up.

§ 5 l. 24. τὸν θεὸν ἐπήγοντο — the usual custom before sending out a colony.

26. περιοίκων — the descendants of the old Achaean stock, without political rights, living mainly by trade. They were largely drawn upon for military service outside Peloponnese.

28. Ἀχαιῶν — some Achaeans afterwards settled there notwithstanding.

30. Ἀλκίδας—c. 16, etc.

§ 6 l. 31. ἐκ καινῆς—adverbial, like ἀπὸ τῆς ἵσης I. 15, ἀπὸ (τῆς) πρώτης etc.; δι' ὁρθῆς, 'aright,' Soph. Ant. 994.

35. εἰρξαν τὸ κατὰ Θ—'barred the (approach) on the side towards Th.,' i.e. built a barrier across the pass (στενόν), to protect harbour and arsenal from the Thessalians.

tion in the colony.

7. ἀπέβη—impersonal.

§ 2 l. 8. αἴτιον δὲ ἦν οὔτε κτλ.—the other passages in Thuc. which are introduced by αἴτιον, show the following constrs. :—

(1) αἴτιον δ' ἦν ὅτι II. 65.

(2) αἴτιον ἦν οἱ with nom. partic. IV. 26.

Here we have a third variety. Compare τεκμήριον δέ, usually followed by γάρ. (It does not seem necessary to alter the text here. If anything is wrong, it is most prob. that ἦν should be bracketed, and a comma placed at δέ, as in the constr. τὸ δ' αἴτιον, ἐν τοῖς πένησιν ἦν τὸ λητουργεῖν, Demosth. de Cor. 108.)

οἱ τε Θέσσαλοι . . καὶ ὧν—i.e. both the Th. and (those others, besides the Th.) whose land was threatened by the new colony, viz. the Dolopes, Oetaeans, and other tribes. This is decidedly simpler than making ὧν apply still to the Thessalians and taking τε as co-ordinate with οὐ μέντοι below.

14. πάνυ πολλούς—we do not know the number: Diodorus' figures, amounting to 10,000, are untrustworthy.

16. οὐ μέντοι—the combination οὐ δέ being avoided.

17. οἱ ἀφικνούμενοι—perhaps annually.

20. ἄ—internal accus., ἐξηγούμενοι being here absolute.

§ 1 l. 5. Ἐλλομενῶ—“probably on the bay of Vlichio 94 (Klimino), on the E. coast of the island” (Oberhummer).

τῆς Λευκαδίας—sc. γῆς. Coreyra, Cephallenia and Zacynthus were already allies of Athens. For a previous attempt on Leucas see c. 7, 5. Sparta had, besides Leucas, Oeniadae, and Ambracia.

§ 2 l. 12. ἔξω—sc. τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ, the land they had in Aearnanian. For the isthmus see c. 81. 1.

14. τὸ ἱερόν—at the southernmost corner of the island.

15. οἱ δὲ Ἀκαρνανες—Leucas and Anactorium [c. 114, 3].

Corinthian colonies, controlled the entrance to the Ambracian gulf.

17. ἀποτείχίζειν—‘to cut them off from the mainland.’ In c. 95, 2 this projected wall is referred to as περιτείχισις, i.e. wall from sea to sea.

ὥς καλόν—sc. ἐστί.

22. Ναυπάκτῳ τε . . καὶ ἦν . .—the second cause is expressed in an independent form—infin. with verb of saying supplied. A good parallel is iv. 3 λιμένος τε προσόντος, καὶ τοὺς Μεσσηνίους . . πλεῖστ’ ἂν βλάπτειν.

§ 4 l. 27. διὰ πολλοῦ—‘far apart.’

§ 5 l. 30. Ἀποδοτοῖς—this tribe is to the NE. of Naupactus.

31. Ὀφιονεῦσι—N. of the Apodoti.

32. Εὐρυτάσιν—N. and E. of the Ophioneis. All three tribes belong to New Aetolia, Αἰτωλία ἐπίκτητος, as distinct from Old Aetolia, ἡ ἀρχαία, of the Iliad. (All that can be known about the tribes will be found in Woodhouse, Aetolia.)

35. καὶ τᾶλλα προσχωρήσειν ‘refers back to the expression τὸ ἄλλο ἡπειρωτικὸν τὸ ταύτῃ—by which we must understand the Messenians (or Thucydides) to mean that the Athenian ‘sphere of influence’ in Western Hellas would be enormously extended if the three Aetolian tribes were subjugated. It would be difficult, however, to state precisely what tribes were in the historian’s mind’ (Woodhouse).

95 § 1 l. 1. Μεσσηνίων—objective.

4. μετὰ τῶν Αἰτωλῶν—i.e. when he had forced them to join.

5. κατὰ γῆν ἐλθεῖν ἐπὶ Βοιωτοῦς—this exceedingly bold plan was due to Demosthenes only. No doubt Thuc. heard all about it from D. himself. The territory of the Ozolian Locrians, on the Corinthian gulf, S. of the Apodoti, lay between Naupactus and Phocis. The Locrians were allies of Athens (ii. 9).

6. Κυνίσιον—an important strategical position, chosen by Philip of Macedon in 339 B.C. It was one of the towns of the ancient Dorian tetrapolis.

8. Φωκίας—nominally allies of Sparta, but there was a powerful democratic party in sympathy with Athens.

11. οὖν—resuming after the parenthesis, like igitur.

13. Σόλλιον—probably this Corinthian colony lay some distance from the sea, but possessed a piece of the coast with a harbour.

§ 2 l. 18. τριακοσίοις—ten to a trireme, as usual at this period.

20. ἐστράτευσεν—most probably he sailed up the gulf to Naupactus and thence to Oeneon in Locri where he landed (cf. c. 89, 3). (The site of the latter is fully discussed by Woodhouse, l.c.)

§ 3 l. 22. οὔτοι—as distinct from the Opuntian and Epinemidian Locrians who were allies of Sparta.

23. ἔδει—‘were to.’ The Locrians showed no alacrity, and seem to have done nothing to help Demosthenes in the expedition. They were not keen allies of Athens (Woodhouse, Aetolia, p. 351).

§ 1 l. 1. ἐν . . τῷ ἱερῷ—this must have been W. of Oeneon, 96 within a short march of the frontier.

4. χρησθέν—accus. abs.

ἐν Νεμέᾳ—of course ambiguous. We learn from Plutarch and Pausanias that Hesiod and his servant were murdered by two young men because they believed that the poet had insulted their sister. Their bodies were cast into the sea. Hesiod’s was carried “by dolphins” to Molyeria. Thence it was taken to Orchomenus in Boeotia and buried there.

§ 2 l. 7. Ποτιδανίαν—“situated exactly opposite to the only ford of the river Mórnos” (Woodhouse). The ancient name of the river was probably Daphnos. The town is at the extreme SW. of Apodotia, just over the border.

Κροκύλειον . . Τείχιον—Demosthenes marched to the NE. from Potidania into Apodotia, attacking the towns in succession. Both places have been identified (by Bazin and Woodhouse). Teichium is close to the border of Ophioneia.

9. Εὐπάλιον—now Sulés, near Potidania.

10. τὰ ἄλλα καταστρεψάμενος—i.e. the rest of Apodotia, before advancing into Ophionea. The Locrian light-armed troops had not yet turned up, and Demosthenes had gone only a very short way when he found it desirable to modify his plan considerably.

12. ἐς Ναύπακτον—as the best base for operating against Ophionea.

§ 3 l. 14. οὐκ ἐλάνθανεν . . οὔτε ὅτε . . ἐπειδὴ τε—"οὔτε," says Prof. Lamberton, "is before ὅτε, because the contrast connects itself most closely and naturally with the different points of time." The sequence is irregular, but the sentence is quite clear.

17. οἱ ἔσχατοι . . Καλλιῆς—these tribes, then, must be the easternmost of the Ophioneis. καθήκοντες is not to be understood to mean that they extended right down to the Malian Gulf, but rather marks the direction. (It is possible that οἱ . . καθήκοντες is an addition to the text, a note made after Heraclea became part of Aetolia, which happened in 280 B.C.)

6. τὴν δ' ἐν ποσίν—sc. κώμην. Cf. Soph. Antig. 1327 τὰν ποσὶν κακά, 'what lies in one's way.'

§ 2 l. 3. τῇ τύχῃ ἐλπίσας—causal dat., 'rendered sanguine by his fortune.' His confidence is amazing.

11. ἐχώρει ἐπὶ Αἰγιτίου—recent authorities have made it highly probable that Aegitium is Velúchovos, which, Woodhouse says, is the strongest fortress in Aetolia. It is in Ophionea. If this is so, notice (1) that Demosthenes has completely accepted the original plan of the Messenians, (2) that he has crossed the river Daphnos since advancing from Teichium. It is likely that Thuc. did not know of this river.

16. ὀγδοήκοντα — the distance is really a little over a hundred stades—thirteen miles. The difference can scarcely be regarded as a serious argument against the identification of the site. (Possibly Η, i.e. ἐκατόν, in an early uncial ms. reappeared as Π' by a copyist's error.)

§ 3 l. 17. βεβοηθηκότες γὰρ . . ᾔσαν—viz. the relief force; see c. 96, 3. The delay at Teichium had given them the opportunity.

20. ὁπότε—this, and not ὅτε, is prob. correct, as elsewhere Thuc. uses ὅτε only with indic.—The country through which the Athenians retreated on Oenon was exceedingly wild and difficult.

98 § 1 l. 1. μέχρι—c. 10, 3.

2. αὐτοῖς—ethic, but in unusual position.

3. οἱ δέ—the τοξόται: an epic and Ionic usage, since the subject is not a new one. The use occurs occasionally in Attic prose. Thompson² At. Syn. § 47, note.

6. αὐτοί — the main body, in contrast with οὔτοι, the archers.

7. καί before ἐπὶ πολὺ is 'quite.'

11. ὁ ἡγεμών—"the wonderful precision with which the [guide] possessing local knowledge selects the proper path is only equalled by the ease with which he loses it when working in an unfamiliar region. Chromon was, perhaps, a shepherd picked up at Eupalion" (Woodhouse).

§ 2 l. 14. κατὰ πόδας—"promptly," 'rapidly.'

§ 4 l. 26. ἡλικία ἡ αὐτή—"and men of the same efficiency." The phrase is so compressed that it has become obscure. Thuc. means οὔτοι (οἱ) τοσοῦτοι (ἦσαν) τὸ πλῆθος καὶ ἡλικία ἡ αὐτὴ (ἦσαν); and ἡλικία is collective. It is impossible to render 'in the prime of life too,' because it is obvious that all who were serving must be part of the ἡλικία, or those of military age.

§ 5 l. 35. φοβούμενος—doubtless he feared impeachment (εἰσαγγελία), possibly on a γραφὴ προδοσίας. As soon as Demosthenes should return, he would be a private citizen, since he had not been elected Strategus for the official year 426 (summer)—425 (summer).

§ 1 l. 3. Λοκρίδα—the Italian, of course. The Halex 99 formed the boundary between Locri and Rhegium, and no doubt this expedition was undertaken at the request of the latter.

§ 1 l. 1. προπέψαντες πρότερον—pleonastic. The time of 100 this embassy was doubtless when the Aetolians got wind of the expedition of Demosthenes (c. 96, 3). The sentence is not clear, but what was done seems to be this: the three ambassadors went first to Corinth; then, having got no promise of help there, they went on to Sparta, and there they succeeded; but by the time that the force was ready to start, Demosthenes was back at Naupactus. The delay is doubtless partly due to the fact that the 3000 hoplites sent (§ 2) were all mercenaries (see c. 109, 2 note) from different quarters; and it took time to collect these.

7. ἐπαγωγὴν—by the Messenians, c. 92, 1.

§ 2 l. 9. πεντακόσιοι—these 500 adventurous Heracleots are not mentioned again. The reason why they are mentioned at all is their surprisingly large number.

12. ξυνηκολούθουν—according to the Spartan custom, in case anything happened to Eurylochus.

101 § 1 l. 1. ἐς Δελφούς—a natural place to choose for an army that was to march to Naupactus.

§ 2 l. 7. Ἀμφισσῆς—extreme E. of Locri, near to Phocis. As for the Phocians see n. on c. 95. 1. Locri and Phocis were on opposite sides.

10. οὖν—‘to be sure,’ or ‘indeed,’ as in γὰρ οὖν. It has nothing to do with μέν here.

11. Μυονέας—i.e. Myonia lay on the natural route through Locri. The names of the places that follow need not be considered.

δυσεσβολώτατος—for the fem. form cf. c. 89, 5.

102 § 1 l. 3. Κυτίνιον τὸ Δωρικόν—c. 95, 1.

5. Οἰνεῶνα αἰρεῖ . . καὶ Εὐπάλιον—the Athenian influence in the W. of Locri was stronger. For the towns see c. 95. (It used to be thought that there is a reversion of the geographical order in the mention of the places; but this has been shown by Woodhouse to be an error.)

§ 2 l. 7. γενόμενοι—viz. the force under Eurylochus.

§ 3 l. 13. τὰ ἐκ τῆς Αἰτωλίας—ἐκ of the source of the ξυμφορά.

§ 4 l. 18. ἐπὶ τῶν νεῶν—for ‘on board their (Aeolian) ships’ we should expect ἐπὶ τῶν σφετέρων νεῶν. If the text is right, it is probable as Widmann says, that some of the thirty Athenian ships had not returned home and that c. 98, 5 is therefore inaccurate.

§ 5 l. 25. ἐς τὴν . . Καλυδῶνα . . Πλευρῶνα—to the Aeolis that is now (so) called, Calydon and Pleuron, i.e. to New Aeolis. We know that the name Aeolis was once confined to the territory of Calydon; but Pleuron had been added to it. Calydon and Pleuron are two of the five cities of Old Aetolia mentioned in the Iliad.

The usual rendering ‘to Aeolis which is now called Calydon and Pleuron’ really makes no sense, for Thuc. could not refer so to two cities far more famous in the heroic days than in his own.)

26. ἐς τὰ ταύτη χωρία—other parts of Old Aetolia.

Αἰτωλῶν δ' ἡγήετο Θόας . .

οἱ Πλευρῶν' ἐνέμοντο, καὶ Ὠλενον ἡδὲ Πυλὴν

Χαλκίδα τ' ἀγχιᾶλον Καλυδῶνά τε πετρήεσσον (Il. II. 638).

Proschium is Pylene.

§ 6 l. 28. Ἀμπρακιῶται—Amphilochian Argos now belonged to Amphilochians and Acarnanians. But the Ambraciots, who had once possessed it, and had been turned out by the help of Athens, in 437 B.C., wanted to recover it. They had made a vain attempt to do so in 430 B.C. The Ambraciots were in alliance with Sparta.

32. πᾶν τὸ ἡπειρωτικόν—cf. c. 94, 3. In 429 B.C. the Ambraciots had held out hopes to Sparta of acquiring (1) Acarnania (2) Zacynthus and Cephallenia, (3) Naupactus. It is noteworthy that nothing is said this time about the islands, doubtless because the crushing naval defeats the Peloponnesians had sustained from Phormio in 429 and their rough experiences again during the troubles in Coreyra made any project for the acquisition of these islands hopeless. Since the latter events, it is hardly surprising that Athens did not trouble to acquire Leucas (see c. 94, 2).

§ 7 l. 36. ἐκστρατεύσαμένοις — ‘when they (should) have taken the field.’

37. περὶ τὸ Ἄργος—with βοηθεῖν.

§ 1 l. 3. τῶν Ἑλλήνων—i.e. the Siceliots, whereas the Sicels are βάρβαροι. 103

5. ξύμμαχοι—“the name allies shows that they remained distinct though subject communities” (Freeman).

6. αὐτοῖς—with ξυνεπολέμουν.

7. Ἰνῆσσαν—identical with Aetna, not far from Catana. It had been an important Sicel stronghold.

§ 3 l. 16. Καϊκῖνον—unknown. Take κατὰ τὸν K. with ἐκράτησαν.

§ 1 l. 1. ἐκάθηραν—doubtless in gratitude for the cessation of the plague. The oracle perhaps gave directions how the plague might be kept away. It has been pointed out that Nicias had much to do with this ceremony of purification. His great interest in the event and his benefactions to Delos are known from Plutarch. 104

2. δῆ—explanatory. The “purification” by Pisistratus is noticed by Herodotus (I. 64).

§ 2 l. 6. θῆκαι—‘coffins.’ Notice the not very common attraction of the antecedent into the case of the rel., though the antecedent is not placed in the rel. clause. Thompson² § 50 D. In Latin this constr., familiar from urben quatin statuo vestra est, is an old colloquialism.

11. Πολυκράτης—he ruled 532-521 B.C. According to Herod. III. 164 Samos was πολίων πασέων πρώτη in his time.

13. Νήσων—the Cyclades. ἄρξας is ‘making himself master of,’ ingressive.

14. τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι—Apollo was worshipped much earlier than the time of Polycrates in the rocky island of Rhenea: Hymn to Apollo 44—see on § 4—written not later than 600 B.C. Cf. Theocritus XVII. 70 ἴσον καὶ Ῥήναιαν ἄναξ ἐφίλησεν Ἀπόλλων.

16. τὴν πεντετηρίδα—the first celebration probably took place in March (Anthesterion) 425 B.C.

17. τὰ Δήλια—(namely) the Delia.’ The words are bracketed by some edd., but Diodorus, whose account is derived from Thuc. (through Ephorus), says ἐποίησαν πανήγυριν τὴν τῶν Δηλίων.

§ 3 l. 19. ξύνοδος—in celebration of the god’s birth.

21. ἐθεώρουν—‘attended the festival.’

ἐς τὰ Ἐφέσια—in honour of Artemis (ἡ Ἐφεσία θεός).

23. χοροὺς τε ἀνήγον—from the meaning ‘lift up’ a cry, etc., ἀνάγω comes to mean ‘set going,’ ‘start’; Eur. Tro. 325 ἀναγ’ ἀναγε χορόν. Notice the metrical χοροὺς τ’ ἀνήγον αἱ πόλεις.

25. ἐκ προοιμίου—the quotations are from the famous “Homeric hymn” to Apollo; it was actually sung at the festival, where it received a prize.

27. ἀλλ’ ὅτε κτλ. = Hymn to Apollo 146-150, with important variations from the version of the hymn as found in the extant MSS. ‘But when your heart rejoices most in Delos.’

28. ἐλκεχίτωνες—alluding to the long robes of the Ionians in early times, almost obsolete in the days of Thuc.

29. σὴν ἐς ἀγυιάν—meaning uncertain; the square before the temple of Apollo, where the ἀγών was held, is the suggestion of Sikes ad loc. The l. in the MSS. of the hymn stands αὐτοῖς σὺν παῖδεσσι καὶ αἰδοίῃς ἀλόχοισιν.

31. καθέσωσιν ἀγῶνα—‘have made the assembly sit down,’ to start the contests. ἀγών is ‘an assembly at games’: see

Leaf on Hiad xv. 428. The mss. of the hymn have στήσονται ἀγῶνα.

§ 5 l. 34. τὸν γὰρ Δηλιακὸν χορὸν τῶν γυναικῶν—the eulogy of the κοῦραι Δηλιάδες, Delian women who sang the chorus, immediately precedes the passage about to be quoted.

35. τοῦ ἐπαίνου—viz. of the Delian women. For the gen. cf. c. 59, 4.

37. ἀλλ' ἄγεθ' κτλ. = H. to Apollo 165–172.

13. ὑποκρίνασθαι ἀφήμῳς—‘answer with one accord,’ i.e. ὁμοφύμῳς. The scholiast gives ἀθρίως. The reading ἀφήμῳς is supported by that of the mss. of the hymn. ἀφ' ἡμέων (or similar). Inferior mss. of Thuc. give εὐφήμῳς.

44. τυφλὸς ἀνὴρ—‘this line,’ says Sikes, ‘was at least partly the origin of the tradition that Homer was blind, and lived in Chios.’

§ 6 l. 49. καὶ τὰ πλεῖστα—‘and most parts’ of the ξύροδος.

50. ὑπὸ ξυμφορῶν—when Persia set her heel on the necks of the Ionians.

§ 1 l. 2. ὥσπερ ὑποσχόμενοι . . κατέσχον—in accordance with the promise to Eurylochus by which they had detained his force. 105

7. Ὀλπας—on the Ambracian gulf.

8. ὁ . . τευχισάμενοι . . ἐχρῶντο—the more ordinary constr. by which, when partic. and verb that govern different cases have a common object, the case of the obj. is accommodated to the partic.

ποτε—this occupation of Olpae by the Aearnians probably took place at the time when the Ambraciots had first become powerful in Argos. The meaning is clearly that the Aearnians had now ceased to hold it, and that it belonged to the Amphiloehians. The Aearnians had used Olpae as a common place of justice.

10. ἐπιθαλασσίας—if Argos lies where it is usually placed, it is some distance from the sea, but the inaccuracy need not be pressed. Still there is some reason to think that Argos and Crenae should change places on the maps, Argos being placed on the coast, S. of Olpae, and Crenae inland. The site marked Argos would be a suitable position from which to watch for an enemy advancing from Aearmania to join his ally at Olpae, of course avoiding Argos.

§ 3 l. 17. πέμπουσιν—to Naupactus. Demosthenes was not, strictly speaking, Strategus now, but he still had charge of the defence of Naupactus, and therefore continued to hold an official position until he should be relieved by the arrival at Naupactus of the twenty ships here referred to.

§ 4 l. 24. πόλιν—Ambracia.

27. ἡ μάχη γένηται—the expected battle. The phrase is passive of τὴν μάχην ποιεῖσθαι.

106

§ 1 l. 5. Ἀχελῶν—frontier between Aetolia and Acarnania. The route:—

1. Through the territory of Stratus, the greatest city in Acarnania, westwards to

2. the territory of Phytia (Phoitia); thence northwards

3. through Eastern Medionia, which brought Eurylochus to the Ambracian gulf; thence eastwards

4. across the district of Limnaea, avoiding the town (of doubtful name) at the SE. corner of the gulf; and so

5. across the low hills called Thyamus, and through the friendly territory of the Agraei; hence down into

6. the territory of Argos, between that city and Crenae, to Olpae.

§ 2 l. 11. αὐθις—‘then,’ or ‘afterwards.’ It is usual to make Μεδεῶνος depend on παρ’ ἔσχατα; but Herbst seems right in taking Μεδεῶνος with διὰ, and making παρ’ ἔσχατα modify the name of both districts; i.e. they went along the border of Phytia and also of Medionia.

14. Ἀγραικόν for ἀγροῖκον of the MSS., which is not used of districts, is a certain emendation.

§ 1 l. 2. καθίζουσιν—sc. τὸν στρατόν, but practically intrans.

9. Ἀθηναίων—doubtless a small force stationed at Naupactus. Demosthenes used the ships referred to in c. 102.

4. Oberhummer thinks that from Limnaea he went by land, following the line of Eurylochus, that he joined the Acarnanian division at Crenae, and accompanied it to Argos. This seems most probable.

§ 2 l. 10. τὸν λόφον, if genuine, is in apposition to τὰς Ὀλπας, but the description does not seem likely or necessary after c. 105. 1.

12. Ἀμφιλόχων—i.e. those of Amphiloehia generally; for the reason why the majority were restrained from taking part in the fighting see c. 114. 3.

16. μετά—Demosthenes was to be Commander-in-chief.

§ 3 l. 18. χαράδρα . . μεγάλη—this has been recognized in a brook, the banks of which are overshadowed with plane-trees ; cf. the ὁδὸς κοίλη καὶ λοχμῶδης.

26. κατὰ τὸ ὑπέρεχον—where the enemy's line (the left wing, c. 108, 1) outflanked them.

§ 4 l. 31. ὀλίγων—a strange way of referring to the sixty Athenian archers: we should expect simply μετὰ τῶν Ἀθ. Possibly ὀλίγων is an addition to the text.

32. ἐπείχον governs τὸ δὲ ἄλλο. The Acarnanians were in separate contingents, each under its own commander.

34. ἀναμίξ—on the right wing the Ambraciots evidently were the principal troops ; cf. c. 108, 2.

§ 1 l. 6. ἐς ἀλκὴν ὑπομῖναι—‘stand their ground to the point of resistance.’ For ἀλκή see on c. 30, 2. 108

8. τὸ κατ’ Εὐρύλοχον—‘that part where Eu. was.’

11. τὸ πολὺ τοῦ ἔργου ἐπέξῃλθον—both ἐξ- and ἐπεξ- can have the accus.: the latter is the normal constr., and it is not certain that there is any parallel for the former in Thuc. In l. 70 the mss. vary in the same way as here.

§ 2 l. 15. μαχιμώτατοι—this refers to οἱ Ἀμπρακιῶται only, not to οἱ . . κέρας, who are the few Peloponnesians on the right wing. This restricted reference is so awkward that it is not unlikely that καί after Ἀμπρακιῶται ought to be removed, so as to render ‘the A. on the right wing.’

§ 3 l. 16. ὥς . . νενικημένον—this is what they found on returning from the pursuit of the enemy's left. The inference is clearly that τὸ πλεον also retreated to Ολπαι: cf. ἐς φυγὴν . . καταστήσαι above. With a colon instead of the usual comma after Ὀλπας, the difficulty that has been found in making αὐτῶν presently refer—as it must do—to the whole army, disappears.

20. αὐτῶν—‘of the army.’ It cannot mean ‘of the right wing’ only, since the Mantineans were posted almost on the left wing.

21. προσπίπτοντες—‘while rushing to the fortress of Olpae.’

§ 1 l. 2. αὐτός—‘single-handed.’ 109

5. πολιορκήσεται—‘to stand a siege.’

§ 2 l. 13. ἀποθανόντας=νεκρούς.

16. Ἀκαρνάνων depends on ξυστρατήγων, possessive gen.

σπένδονται—for the plur. verb, rare with a sing. subj.

followed by μετά, see Thompson² § 7. βουλόμενος following makes the conjecture σπένδεται probable.

20. τὸν μισθοφόρον ὄχλον—i.e. the Peloponnesian forces, exclusive of the Mantineans, the ἄρχοντες and ἀξιολογώτατοι. The Peloponnesian troops were mercenaries, it would seem. τὸν ξενικόν is prob. a mere gloss on μισθοφόρον.

22. διαβαλεῖν ἐς—‘to damage them with.’

23. Ἑλλήνας—Steup places the comma at χρήζων so as to make Ἑλλήνας object of καταπροδόντες, i.e. the Ambraciots and the ὄχλος μισθοφόρος. This is better than ἐς τοὺς ἐκείνη. . . Ἑλλήνας together, i.e. the Ambraciots only, because (1) the Amphilocheians too would be naturally included under the τοὺς, and they were not Ἑλλήνες, (2) the mercenaries should certainly be included in the object of καταπροδόντες.

§ 3 l. 26. ὥσπερ ὑπῆρχε—‘as well as circumstances allowed.’

27. οἷς ἐδίδοδοτο—sc. ἐκείνοι.

110 § 1 l. 3. πόλεως—c. 105, 4. The force from Ambracia had to march to Idomene (c. 112), then through the hills into the plain of Argos.

τὰ καρτερά—strong positions in the hills.

111 § 1 l. 2. οἷς ἔσπειστο—see c. 109, 2.

3. πρόφασιν—the so-called accus. in apposition to a sentence, best regarded as a free use of the internal or adverbial accus. The actions described are the πρόφασις (Bayfield on Soph. El. 130, Hardie, Latin Prose, p. 7).

§ 2 l. 9. οἱ ἄλλοι—i.e. the Peloponnesians who were not included in the secret agreement.

οἶσοι . . ξυνεξεληθόντες—‘as many, that is, who had chanced to go out (from Olpæ in a body fortuitously with the others.’ This is the best interpretation of a passage that has been very much discussed. Notice (1) μέν, with no corresponding δέ, implies a contrast: part remained behind in Olpæ; (2) οὕτως—ὡς εἶχον, ‘just by chance’: (3) the aorist partic. with ἐτύγχανον is unusual, the rule being ἐτύγχανον + pres. or perf. partic., ἐτυχον + aor. partic.; (4) ξυνεληθόντες, the other reading, would mean, ‘to have met together in Olpæ.’ A great number of emendations have been proposed, but the reading of the mss. gives a satisfactory sense. If (3) is a fatal objection, then (a) a comma must be placed at οὕτως, and the latter must be considered to point forward to ξυνεξεληθόντες—then ἐτίγχανον οἷτως without a partic. is strange; or (b) μὲν must be altered to μεμονωμένοι or μένοντες; or (c) a comma must be placed at ἄθροοι, so that ἐτίγχανον οἷτως ἄθροοι sc. ὄντες = 'happened by chance to be together.' Such an omission of a partic. with τυγχάνω is not impossible where an adj. is added.

16. τις—often explained as collective for τινες; this is doubtful, because of the sing. νομίσας following.

§ 4 l. 22. ἐς τὴν Ἀγραῖδα—the Agraei were independent and friendly to the Peloponnesians. Woodhouse thinks that they were not Aetolians.

§ 1 l. 2. Ἰδομενῆν—twin heights in the hills, the exact site uncertain. 112

12. διὰ τῶν Ἀμφιλοχικῶν ὁρῶν—i.e. inland, among the hills, in order to stop up the roads.

13. ἅμα ὄρθρῳ—the time between first cock-crow and the dawn: ὄρθρος ἐστὶν ἡ ὥρα τῆς νυκτὸς καθ' ἣν ἀλεκτρυόνες ἄδουσιν. ἀρχεται δὲ ἐνάτης ὥρας (circa 2 A.M.) καὶ τελευτᾷ εἰς διαγελῶσαν ἡμέραν (Phrynichus).

§ 4 l. 18. Δωρίδα τε γλῶσσαν—it was only thirty years since the Naupactian Messenians had left the Peloponnese. The Ambraciots spoke Doric.

20. τῇ ὀψει—'with the eyes,' pointing the contrast with what they heard. Here as in other passages (e.g. VII. 75, 2) it is disputed whether the phrase means this or 'by their appearance.'

§ 6 l. 27. τῶν δὲ . . ἀνεπιστημόνων—for the gen. abs. though it refers to the subj. of the verb see c. 13, 7: 55, 1.

§ 8 l. 40. σκυλεύσαντες—the Athenians themselves were not above this on occasions.

§ 1 l. 1. καὶ αὐτοῖς κτλ.—the incident as related inevitably reminds us of a Greek tragedy—e.g. the Persae. 113

1. τῶν νεκρῶν οὓς ἀπέκτειναν—cf. II. 52 νεκροὶ ἐπ' ἀλλήλοισι ἀποθνήσκοντες.

6. ξυνεξῆσαν—‘tried to depart with them.’

§ 2 l. 9. τὸ πάθος—‘the catastrophe’ of Idomene.

10. τῶν μετὰ σφῶν—i.e. that they had belonged to those who had fought with his own comrades—i.e. with the body that escaped over the border.

§ 3 l. 11. θαυμάζοι . . τεθνᾶσιν—the change of mood from opt. to indic. has nothing to do with the sense: it is purely stylistic. Cf. c. 22, 8.

12. αὖ—‘for his part.’

13. τῶν ἐν Ἰδομεναΐς—eddl. compare II. 34 τοὺς ἐν Μαραθῶνι where, however, ἐν should prob. be omitted (see Neil on Aristoph. Eq. 785.). In most cases a partic. is expressed: but ‘those of Idomenae’ is, of course, sufficient.

15. τὰ ὅπλα ταυτί—the omission of the number—διακοσίων—here appears to be impossible: ‘these are not the arms, then,’ would be natural, were it not for the contrast following. The schol. already did not find διακοσίων in the text.

§ 4 l. 17. μαχομένων—imperf.; cf. c. 62, 5.

18. εἴπερ γε—‘yes if,’ taking up τῶν . . ἐστίν, exactly as in dramatic dialogue the retort is apt to catch up the question. (I have put a note of interrogation at ἐστίν in place of the usual full stop, because the remark seems to be a query as well as a denial: ‘then they are not . . ?’)

19. ἀλλ’ ἡμεῖς γε—‘nay, but we.’

20. καὶ μὲν δὴ . . γε—‘why I assure you it was with these’; for the particles cf. Plato, Symp. 197 Α καὶ μὲν δὴ τὴν γε τῶν ζώων πόλιν.

§ 6 l. 27. πάθος κτλ.—‘this disaster was the worst that . .’ The number of days is three. The qualifications are very precise, and suggest that Thuc. is conscious that other events might be suggested.

29. κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τόνδε—many think that only the Ten Years’ (Archidamian) war is meant. It is impossible to attain certainty on the question. If Thuc. wrote this soon after the event, the expression is quite natural.

30. ἄπιστον—pred. not to γενέσθαι, but to λέγεται γενέσθαι together, i.e. ‘the total that it is said to have amounted to is incredible.’

6. έξηρέθησαν—the number is prob. influenced by the apposition πανοπλίας.

7. κατέπλευσε—to Athens. He was once more elected Strategus at the following elections (in spring of 425 B.C.) for the year 425-424. A statue of Nikē was set up on the acropolis as a memorial of this victory: an inscription relating to its repair is still extant. The Messenians and Naupactians set up a Nikē at Delphi: a fragment of the inscription upon it is extant.

§ 2 l. 15. αναχώρησιν . . έξ Οϊνιαδών—i.e. by sea, the ships obtained from Oeniadae, which was friendly. These Ambraciots had prob. got to Oeniadae from Agraeis by crossing the Achelous and marching right across Aetolia. They could hardly have got safely home to Ambracia by sea without leave from the Acarnanians. (οίπερ for οὔπερ and Σαλυνθίου for Σαλύνθιον are certain corrections.)

23. βοηθεῖν of defensive, στρατεύειν of offensive, operations.

25. επί Ἀνακτόριον—the Corinthians had added fresh colonists to this important place in 433 B.C. A year after this agreement (autumn 425 B.C.) the Acarnanians, supported by the Athenians at Naupactus, took Anactorium.

§ 4 l. 27. διέλυσαν τὸν πόλεμον—Ambracia never recovered from its effects.

§ 1 l. 4. ἄνωθεν—from the interior, where the Sicels dwelt: τὰ μέσα καὶ τὰ πρὸς βορρᾶν τῆς νήσου ἔχουσι (VI. 2). Σικελῶν τῶν for Σικελιωτῶν is fairly certain: the Siceliots were being hard pressed by Syracuse.

115

5. τὰ ἔσχατα—Freeman says that the extreme eastern part of the Himeraean land must be meant.

§ 2 l. 9. ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς διάδοχον—it is hardly necessary to supply a partic.: διάδοχον in itself implies ταχέστερα. It appears that Laches, on returning to Athens, was prosecuted for embezzlement of public money.

11. ἔπεισαν—plup. in sense.

15. ὡς οὐ περιοψόμενοι—with παρεσκευάζοντο.

§ 4 l. 18. καταλυθήσεσθαι — by establishing themselves in Sicily.

19. μελέτην . . ποιείσθαι — it has been pointed out that this is prob. intentional irony on the part of Thuc., who repeats the statements of the war-party of the day. There was an unlimited field for Athenian naval activity round the coasts of Peloponnese without sending fleets to Sicily.

§ 5 l. 21. Πυθόδωρον κτλ. — the three commanders are mocked at by Aristoph. Acharn. 598.

116 § 1 l. 4. τῶν Καταναίων — Catania, now the second city in Sicily, has survived many terrible disasters, due partly to its wars, and partly to its proximity to the mountain.

§ 2 l. 6. πεντηκοστῷ ἔτει — if the number is exact, the previous eruption would be in 475 or 474 B.C. There is a magnificent description of an eruption of Etna in Pindar's first Pythian (474 B.C.), and in Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound (circa 468 B.C.). An eruption is recorded as occurring at the time of the battle of Plataea, 479 B.C. λέγεται shows that Thuc. was not quite sure as to the exact date.

8. τρὶς γεγενῆσθαι — the 'first' eruption is legendary. A fourth is recorded in 396 B.C.
